K

K (ká) is the tenth letter of the alphabet; in the common Runes was represented by P (kaun); the Anglo-Saxon k was called cæn (cæn = Germ. kien, a pine or fir-tree; but as this was not a Norse word the Scandinavians represented it by the Norse word nearest in sound to it, kaun (a boil or scab), which bears witness of the Anglo-Saxon origin of the old Norse Runic poem.

B. PRONUNCIATION.—The k is sounded hard or aspirate, the pronunciation varying as that of g does, see p. 186; it is hard in kaldr, kunna, aspirate in kel, kem, kenna, kið, kyssa, kæti, keyri, veikja, etc. the only difference is that k has the same sound, whether initial, medial, kaka, kíkir, just as in English: in modern Danish the medial has been softened into g, e. g. Icel. sök, vaka, líka, Engl. sake, wal like, are in Danish sounded sag, vaage, lige, whereas Sweden and Norway as well as Iceland have kept the old pronunciation.

2. t letter k before t and s is sounded as g, thus okt and ogt, þykkt and þysliks and sligs are sounded alike; and so k is now and then misplaced. MSS., e. g. lakt = lagt, heilakt = heilagt. The spelling and other points referring to k have already been treated under C, p. 92; for gu = kv s. Gramm. p. xxxvi. (II. i. 5).

C. CHANGES.—The change of initial kn into bn has been mentioned in the introduction to letter H (B. II. 2. 7), where however 'hnefi' ought to be struck out of the list: for the changes of nk into kk see the introduction to letter N.

II. according to Grimm's law, the Teut. answers to the Gr. and Lat. g; thus Lat. genus, genu, gentis, Gr. gḗnē = Icel. kyn, kné, kind, etc.: but in borrowed words no change is taken place, as in Keisari, kista, kerti, kjallari, = Lat. Caesar, cista, cella; the words borrowed in that way are very numerous in this letter but there are some slang or vulgar words, which seem not borrowed and yet no change has taken place.

kaðall, m., dat. kaðli, [prob. like Engl. cable, borrowed from m. Lat. capulum, caplum; the word perhaps denotes twisted ropes, for olden times the Scandinavians made their cables of walrus skin, svörð — a cable, esp. as a naut. term, Fms. ii. 279, vii. 82, 283, Ó. H. 28, F. ii. 543, Gullþ. 8, passim.

Engl. cheapen, chaffer, couper, chap-man, etc. (see augr); Germ. kaufen; Dutch koopen; Swed. köpa; Dan. kjøbe; a word common to all Teut. languages. The derivation from Lat. caupona is hardly admissible, whereas Grimm's ingenious suggestion (Dict. iii. 198) connecting it with Goth. kaupaþjan, which Ulf. uses = to strike in the face, is strongly borne out by the very form of the Icel. word;—since, first, this word, although having au as its root vowel, follows the 2nd and not the 1st weak conjugation; secondly, the vowel changes in preterite and participle, which is characteristic of a verb with an inflexive or characteristic j; thirdly, the t in the preterite (so far as is known) is never spelt with ð or p.—keypti, not keyptði or keyptþi (see introduction to letter D, C. III. 2),—which indicates that the t is here radical and not inflexive. The Icel. word therefore represents in its tenses both the Gothic words,—kaupan in the present tense, kaupaþjan in the preterite: the bargain was symbolized by 'striking,' hence the phrase 'to strike' a bargain, Dutch koopslagen.]

 KUMBL, kumbl, kubl, n. This word is chiefly interesting because of its frequent occurrence on the old Dan. and Swed. Runic stones, where it is always used in plur.; the spelling varies, kuml, kubl, or kumbl; in old Icel. writers it only occurs a few times, and they even use the sing.;
 it is now quite obsolete: I. prop. a sign, badge, mark, [A. S. cumbol; Hel. cumbal and cumb = signum], a war badge, esp. used of any heraldic emblems; yet in the Scand. language this sense is rare, —kuml konunga ór kerum valdi, Gh. 7; kumbla-smíðr, a 'cumbol' smith, Akv. 24; the compd her-kuml, the badge worn on the helmet; jótun-k., the giant's mark, i. e. the badge of being the giant's kinsman, Fas. ii. (in a verse); and lastly in ör-kuml, a lasting scar, maiming for life, cp. kumla below.

II. in Scandinavia, analogous to the Gr. σῆμα, kuml came to mean 'a monument', a cairn, bow; in the phrase, göra kuml (kubl), synonymous to göra mark, merki, which also occurs (e.g. Baut. 138, 214, 461, 722, 1143); kuml is the general term, opp. to stain, rúnar, which are special terms; thus distinction is made between stain and kuml, Baut. 771:

1. on Runic stones, as in Danish stones, Tulki raiðsi stain þausi ok gaurpi kubl, Rafn 213; Asfríðr görpi kumbl þann, Thorsen 43; kubl þusi, 23; þurmundr niout (i. e. njót!) kubls, Tb. enjoy thy kuml! rest in peace! 265; Ala sunir garpu kubl þausi aft faður sinn, Rafn 193; sibi sá mannr es þausi kubl upp briuti, a curse be on the man that breaks this k., 205; Usk garpi kumbl þusi, 202; Haraldr kunungr bað gaurva kubl þausi at Gurm faður sinn, 39, (Jellinge.)

β. on Swedish stones, garpi kubl þusi aftir Svin sun sinn, Rafn 35; garpu kuml sniallir sunir Hulmlaugar, Baut. 759; ma igi brautar kubl batra varpa, a better road kuml cannot be, 41, (see the remarks under bautasteinn); Ketill rispi kuml þiasi aftir Val, 1027; Finniþr garpi kuml þiasi aftir Gairbiurn faður sinn, 824; kuml garpi þatsi Ketil slagr, 771; Usk let gaura kuml, likhus ok bru at sun sinn, 735, 1100; þau rispu (raised) kuml þusi, 886.

2. in Icel. a cairn; en mannföll þessi eru sögð eftir kumlum þeim er fundin eru, þar er bardagarnir hafa verit, Gullþ. 25; þar féll þórarinn krókr, ok þeir fjórir, en sjau menn af Steinólfi, þar eru kuml þeirra, Landn. 128; þar féll Skeggbjörn ok átta menn aðrir, þar er haugr Skeggbjarnar á ftinni, en aðrir vóru jarðaðir í Landraugs-holti þar hjá ftinni, ok sér þar enn görla kumlín, Bs. (Kristni S.) i. 15; ok reimt þýkkir þar síðan vera hjá kumlum þeirra, Isl. ii. 115; in sing., þau liggja bæði í kumlum í Laxárdal, Ld. 158; Þorkell vill nú bera aptr sverðit í kumlit, ... saxit var ok upp tekitt ór kumlum Nafars, Rd. ch. 19; þá gekk hann í dalverpli litið ok fann þar kuml manns, þar preifaði hann niðr fyrir fætr sér, ok fann þar manns bein ok sverð eitt, Draum. 129. The worship of haws and cairns was forbidden even in the heathen age as being connected with sorcery, see haugr, högr, whence blætr kumbla, a worshippier of cairns, a wizard, warlock, a term of abuse, Eg. (in a verse); kumla brjótr, Korm. S., is also prob. a false reading for bljótr or blætr.

III. in provinc. Icel. a low hayrick is called kuml; cp. also kumbaldi.

KVIÐR, m., gen. kviðar, pl. kviðir, acc. pl. kviðu, [Ulf. qiss = φῆμια,
-λογία, as in ana-qiss = βλασφημία; þiupi-qiss and wailla-qiss = εὐλογία;
missa-qiss = οὔλογία, etc.]:—prop. a saw, saying, speech, word, and hence in law a verdict given by neighbours; for the Engl. 'verdict' is indeed a kind of rendering of the Norse term; kviðr Norna, the word of the Norns, weird, fate, death, kveld lifir maðr ekki eptir kvið Norna, Hdm. 31;
orðs-kviðr, a saw, proverb; mis-kviðr, 'saying-amiss,' false pleading.
The old law makes a distinction between vætti (a witness) and kviðr (a verdict).—þar er bæði fylgir einni sök vætti ok kviðr, þá skal vætti fara fyrr fram en kviðr, Grág. i. 47: before delivering his opinion each neighbour had to take an oath.—þat er mælt, áðr kviðr sé borinn, at þeir skulu eða vinna allir áðr at dómi, 53. The old records mention various kinds of neighbours and verdicts: 1. in Norse law, a. the heimis-kviðr (heims-kviðr, heimilis-k.), or a 'home-verdict,' a verdict of neighbours, bearing some resemblance to the oath of compurgators; ten, or in lesser cases four or six, neighbours were to accompany the accused to the court, two of whom had to swear on the book, and the rest followed,—en þat er heims kviðr er tíu menn fylgja til móts, en sverja tveir menn á bók, en átta sanna þat, N. G. L. i. 311, cp. ii. 505; hafa með sér heimiliskviðar-vátta til þings, K. Á. 214; hann hafi heiman heimiliskviðar-vitni, 152; nema heimiliskviðar-vitni fylgi, Gpl. 193; þá skal með þessu heimiliskviðar-vitni sækja, N. G. L. i. 140 (heims-kviðar-vitni, 337); þá skal með þessu heimiliskviðar-vitni sækja, at einn skal bera en tveir sanna um þriggja ára mül, en um sex ára mál skal einn sanna en fjórir sverja, en þeir skulu vera fylkis-menn, N. G. L.
i. 140, 316; en ef eigi kemr saga hins sára fram á fyrsta þingi né heimiliskviðar-vitni, þá . . . 160: similar were the 'sandumend' (sooth-sayers) of the early Danish law; to this the old saw refers, hættir er heimis-kviðr, nema sér góðan geti, perilous is the home-verdict, unless one gets a good one, Sdm. 25. β. in Icel., unless the bjargkviðr (q. v.) be identical to heimis-kviðr, this sort of verdict is seldom mentioned; eigi skal heimis-kviðr annan at henda, Grág. i. 361. 2. in Icel. law the tólfstarkviðr (verdict of twelve), also called goða-kviðr (priest verdict), Grág. i.
168, viz. a body of twelve men, of whom eleven were to be summoned by the goði of the district, and he, being the twelfth of the number, had to deliver the final verdict. The verdict of twelve was only appointed for certain cases defined in the law, K. þ. K. 168, v. l.; nú hefir maðr tólfstar-kviðar kvatt, ok skal góði nefna þriðjung-menn sína til kviðar þess með sér, ok er honum rétti hvárþr þeir eru bændr eða gríð-menn, hann skal ellefu menn nefna aðra en sík, Grág. i. 57, see the whole chapter 17 in þ. þ., as also the Grág. passim; ella kveðja til tylptarkviðar goða þess (þann?) er sóttir er . . . , en ef sjálfir er sóttir goðinn þeirri sök, þá skal kveðja samþingis-góðann tóltar-kviðar; tóltar-kviðar skal kveðja þann góða er sá er í þingi er sóttur er, Grág. i. 138; er góði er kvæðr tóltar-kviðar um þat er hann á eigi at skilja, þá . . ., 108, 207; nú koma menn til þings, ok málit í dóm, ok á Glúmr (in his capacity as góði) at bera tóltar-kvið, . . . Glúmr berr af honum kviðinn ok únytti málit, Glúm. ch. 18; tóltar-kviðr átti um at skilja, en hvárgi þeirra Snorra né Arnkel þótti bera mega kviðinn fyrir hleyta sakir við sektjanda ok varnar-áðila, var þá Helgi Hofigarða-góði kvæðr tóltar-kviðar, . . . eptir þat bar Helgi af kviðinn, Eb. ch. 16, cp. also the passage in Lv. ch. 4, where a verdict of twelve seems to be meant. β. but the common popular verdict was the búa-kviðr or neighbour-verdict, given by five, and in some cases by nine, neighbours (see búi), who had to be summoned either at home (kveðja búa heiman) or in certain exceptional instances in the court (á þingi); the instances in the Grág. and the Sagas, esp. the Nj., are almost endless: technical phrase, bera kvið, to give the verdict, Nj. 87, Grág. i. 57, passim; as also, bera af kviðinn, or, bera á kviðinn, to give a verdict for or against, (see bera B. I.); ryðja kvið or kviðu, prop. to 'clear the verdict,' i. e. to challenge the neighbours, Grág. i. 29; bjóða til rúðingar um kviðinn, Nj. 87, passim.

γ. a special kind, egningar-kviðr, a kind of law quirk, Grág. i. 56; ironical, nú er getið um fyrir þorkatli at honum þykkja ríkt bornir kviðirnir, Lv. 27. From the analogy of the Icel. customs, it can be inferred with certainty that along with the invasion of the Danes and Norsemen, the judgment by verdict was also transplanted to English ground, for the settlers of England were kith and kin to those of Iceland, carrying with them the same laws and customs; lastly, after the Conquest it became the law of the land. This old Scandinavian institution gradually died out in the mother countries, and came to an end in Icel. A. D. 1271–1281, with the fall of the Commonwealth, and the introduction of a Norse code of laws, whereas it was naturalised in England, which came to be the classical land of trial by jury.

(see the cat the mouse?) probably refers to the weasel and the fer mouse; but that early in the 12th century the cat was domesticated in Icel. is shewn by the story of the chess-players and the kittens leaping after a straw on the floor, told in Mork. 204, 205; for a curious legend of the genesis of the cat, see Maurer's Volks. 190; kattar sonr, a cat-son (the ermine cat), a bastard, was a term of abuse, Hkr. i. 18: a nickname, Landn.; hvers son ertú?—Ek em Kattarson.—Hvers var köttirinn? ## L is the eleventh letter of the alphabet, and the first of the vowels. In the Runic alphabet on the Golden horn, as well as in the Old Norse, it was represented by l, called lög, q.v. (lög er það er falli, Runic poem; A.S. lagu), and was, as the form shews, drawn from the Greek or Latin alphabet. In old MSS. a l is often used for ll, see Bs. i. 333 sqq.

The l is in Icel. sounded as in other Teut. languages; but ll, as a vowel and not combined with another consonant, had a peculiar sound, dlb, thus, gull, fall, hella, kalla, = guld, fadh, hedliha, etc. This pronunciation is still observed in Icel. as well as in some dialects of western Norway, Vorse-vangen, Sogn, Hardanger; in other parts of Norway it is sounded as dd. There are no means of ascertaining with certainty whether the ancients sounded ll exactly as at present do, or whether it was not more aspirate than dental.

2. The peculiar aspirate sound of l before a radical dental consonant is Gramm. p. xxxvi. (II): thus holt, allt, gult, illt, hallt, etc. (and are still sounded) as holtht, alht, gulht, illht, hallht; as old writers before d, hold, kald, = holhd, kalhd, although in modern pronunciation the aspirate sound is less perceived before a media than before a tenuis.

On some Icel. words the ll is due to assimilation, and answers to the Saxon and Germ. ld, e.g. Icel. gull = Goth. guld, Engl. gold; it is however likely that originally these words were dissonant from those which had a radical ll, and it may be that the peculiar sound of ll was due to this cause—that the sound of ll prevailed and became universal, whilst the original sound was lost; though even in the earliest rhymes no distinction is perceived.

2. In much later times ll assimilated into ll words, brálla = bráðla; as also lr into ll in inflexions, hóll = hólr, Gramm. p. xvi. (I. 3. a): in still later times rl changed into ll, varla, etc., which in mod. pronunciation is sounded as jalla, etc.; but this is not observed in writing, although it is so in old MSS. as also in MSS. of the 15th century.

3. Words having a radical initial b (bl) are to be sought for in the introduction to that letter.

lif, f., see lyf.

LIFA, pres. lifi; pret. lifði; imperat. lif, lifðu, an older form lifi, 655 iv. 1, Stj. 445; neut. part. lifat, masc. lifðr, Hm. 69: there was a strong verb lifa, leif, lifu, lifinn, of which leifa is the causal, but of this word nothing now remains except the part. acc. lifna (vivos), Hkv. 2. 27, and
 dat. lifnum (vivo), 45: [Ulf. lifan = ζην; A. S. lifan; Engl. live; O. H. G.
leben; Germ. leben; Swed. leva; Dan. leve; a word common to all Teut. languages, the original sense of which was to be left, and so akin to leifa, = Lat. superstes esse, which sense still remains in some Icel. phrases;
 cp. also lifna.]

A. To be left; þóat einn hleifr lifi eptir, although one loaf 'lives' behind, i. e. is left, N. G. L. i. 349; skal þat atkvæði þeirra vera í hverju máli sem þá lifir nafusins eptir, er ör er tekinn raddar-stafir ör nafninn, Skáld. (Thorodd); þá er þat atkvæði hans í hverju máli sem eptir lifir nafusins, er ör er tekinn raddar-stafir ör nafni hans, id. 2. of the day, night, or season; þá er þriðjungur lifir dags, when a third of the day is left, N. G. L. i. 9; þá er ellefu nætr lifðu eptir Aprílís mánaðar, 655 iii. 3; laugar-þriðjungur lifði nætr, vakti þorsteinn upp gesti sína, Fms. i. 70.

3. in old sayings this sense is still perceptible, to remain, endure; atkvæði lifa lengst, Isl. ii. (in a verse); lifa ör lengst eptir hvern, Fms. viii. 16:
 as also in old poems, hvat lifir manna (what of men will be left?), er stands, Vsp. 16; líft einir ér, ye alone are left to me, Hdm. 4; otherwise this sense has become obsolete.

B. To live; this sense has almost entirely superseded the old.
 The primitive word denoting life or to live in the Teut. languages was from the root of kvikr (q. v.), of which the verbal form has been replaced by lifa; meðan lifir, whilest he lives, Hm. 9, 53; meðan hann lifði, while he lived, Nj. 45; hann hélt vel trú meðan hann lifði, Fms. xi. 418;

 nokkurra konunga æfi, 192; at sér lifanda, Lat. se vivo, Ib. 18, Grág. i.
 202; lifa langan aldr, Nj. 62; the saying, þeir lifa langan aldr (mod.
 lengst) sem með orðum eru veginr, = Engl. words break no bones, 252:
 lifi konungur, long live the king! (cp. Lat. vivat rex), Stj. 445; lifi heill þú, konungur! 655 iv. 1. 2. lifa við, to live on, feed on; lifa við vín, Gm. 19; þat eina er vér megim lifa við, Al. 133; ok lifðu nú víðr reka, smádyri ok íkorna, Fs. 177: mod., lifa á e-u, to feed on, live on.

3. in a moral sense, to live, conduct one's life; hafði hann ok lifat svá hreinliga sem þeir Kristnir menn er bezt eru síðaðir, Landn. 38; lifa dýrligu lifi, Hom. 147; lifa vel, to live a good, bad life, passim: lifa eptir e-m, to indulge a person, 656 C. 37, 42. 4. also used of fire, to live, be quick; svá at þar mátti lifa eldr, Fas. ii. 517, freq. in mod. usage, the Icel. say, eldrinn lifir, ljósið lifir; (cp. also, drepa ljósið, to kill, quench
a fire, a light; eldrinn er dauðr, ljósið er dauðt, the fire, the light is dead; eldrinn lifnar, is kindled); for this interesting usage cp. also kvikr and kveykja, denoting life and fire.

II. part. lifandi and lifandis, indecl. living; lifandi maðr, Mar.; lifandis sálar, Stj. 31; lifandis manna,

LYRITR, m., or better lyritr or lyrittr, gen. lyritar (but lyrits, Grág. ii. 233), dat. lyriti, plur. lyritar, N. G. L. ii. 94, Jb. 193; the quantity cannot be ascertained because the vellums do not distinguish between long and short vowels; it is spelt with one t throughout the Grág. (Kb.); the alliterative phrase lagalyritr, as also the invariable spelling in the Grágás, shew that the word had no initial b. Former attempts at an etymology, from læ and rifta (Björn á Skarðsá), hlýrar and réttir (Pál Vídal), lygi and rift (Fritzner), must be dismissed; the spelling lyritr, which once or twice occurs in Norse MSS. of the 14th century (N. G. L. i. 394, ii. 94, v. l. 19), is probably a mere corruption. Lyritr is a compd word from lög, law, and rór or reyr, a landmark, which word in the old Swed. law exactly answers to lyrit in the Norse law; lyrit is thus qs. lýr-yr-ti, by assimilation and by weakening the y into i, lyritti; the t being inflexive: its literal sense, therefore, is a lawful rór or landmark. In Sweden there were often five mark-stones, but it is added (Schlyter iii. s. v. rór)—furi stenar oc þri stenar mughu rór heta=four stones and even three stones may be called rór, i. e. make a 'law-rór', a lawful landmark, a lyrit; this, we believe, is the etymology of this much-contested word. About the gender (masc., not fem.) there can be no doubt, from the numerous instances in the Grágás; but in the 13th century the word began to become neuter, thus we have lyritit, Grág. (Kb.) i. 103, lines 14 and 21, but lyritinn several times in the same page: nom. lyriti in Grág. (Sb.) ii. 226; and efalaus lyriti, Nj. passim.

B. SENSE: I. prop. when the boundary of a field or estate was to be drawn, the law prescribed that a mark-stone (mark-steinn) should be raised on the spot, and three other stones laid beside it; these three stones were called landmark-stones (lyrit-steinar or lyritar); by their number and position they were distinguished from all other stones in the field, see N. G. L. ii. 94, cp. note 19 (Jb. 193).

II. metaph. in the Icel. law, a full title of possession, lawful claim to right or property; thus defined by Konrad Maurer—'Lyrit bedeutet in der Grágás und in den ältern Sagas das volle Eigentums-recht, oder auch den Bann, der dem Grundeigentümer zum Schutze seines Eigentumes, dem Goden aber Kraft seiner Amtsgewalt zusteht.' I. the earliest kind was probably the land-lyrit or 'land-ban'; this law term was originally borrowed from the mark-stones themselves, and then came to mean a full title to land, field, pasture, or estate, Grág. ii. 224, 225:—eignar-lyritr, full lawful possession, a legal title of ownership; hafa eignar-lyrit fyrir landi, 204, 222. 2. a veto; Goða-lyritr, the veto of a Goði (Priest), forbidding the court or neighbours to deliver a sentence or verdict in a case, and thus quashing the suit. A Goði alone, by virtue of his office, was entitled to stop a court in this way, whether personally or by one of his liegemen, so that if any one else wished thus to stop a suit, he had first to go to his lieglord (Goði) and be authorised by him to do so; cp. the phrases, taka lyrit af Goða, selja lyrit, ef Goði færir lyrit sinn sjálf fram, and similar law phrases, Grág. i. 109–111, cp. esp. p. p. ch. 38; neglect of this was contempt of court, punishable by the lesser outlawry. The word lyritr occurs at every step in the Grágas, esp. in the phrase, verja lyriti, or verja e-t lyriti, to defend through a lyrit, i. e. to put under veto, to vindicate one's right, forbid, or the like; eigi varðar hagabeit, nema lyriti sé varið, Grág. ii. 224; verja lyriti haga, 225; þótt maðr veri fleirum lyriti (dat.), 226, Nj.; láta lyrit koma fyrir sök, to stop on a case, Grág. i. 109; kaupa land laga kaupi ok lyritar, to buy land by a lawful bargain and with full title of possession, ii. 213; eptir þat nefndi þorkell sér vátta, ok setti (varði?) þeim lyriti, ok fyrirbaud þeim at dæma, Lv. 31; ok er únytt stefna hans eðr lyriti (lyritr?), Grág. ii. 226; hann (the Goði) skal nefna sér vátta, áðr hann færi lyrit fram, í þat vætti, at ek ver lyriti, goða-lyriti, löglyriti fullum dómendum at dæma um sök þá... enda skal hann svá verja kvíðmönnum lyriti, at bera kvíðu um hann, i. 111; ek ver lyriti mínum, löglyriti dómendum at dæma, id.; færa lyrit sinn fram, to utter one's veto, id.; fara með land-lyriti, ii. 225. COMPS: lyritar-eiðr, m. a 'lyrit-oath,' a kind of oath of compurgation in the Norse, but not in the old Icel. law; it was an oath of three, viz. of the person who took the oath, with two compurgators, in remembrance of the three lyrit stones, which gave the name to this oath of compurgation; nú skal lyritar-eið svá vinna, sjálf skal hann vinna, ok annarr jafnréttis-maðr, ... sá skal enn þriðji, er ..., N. G. L. i. 56, cp. Js. 30, Jb.; stendr lyritar-eiðr fyrir hvárt þriggja marka mál ok þau er minni eru, N. G. lögmaðr, m. [old Swed. lagman; the president of the supreme court held in Orkney was called the lagman]:—law-man. In the Scandinavian kingdoms each legal community or state (lög) had laws, its own parliament (lögþing), and its own 'law-man' (lagh-maðr); the lagman was the first commoner and the spokesman of the people against the king and court at public assemblies or elsewhere; he was also the guardian of the law, and the president of the legislature and of the law courts. As in the heathen time laws were not written, the lagman had to say what was the law of the land in any case that came before the general assemblies, at least in Iceland, he had to 'say' (from memory) to the assembled people from the Law-hill (lögberg); hence in the Icelandic Commonwealth he was called lög-sögu-maðr, the 'law-speaker', 'law-sayer', 'speaker of the law', and his law or lög-sögn = 'law-speaking'. I. Sweden and Gothland were the classical lands of lagmen, for the whole kingdom consisted of commonwealths, each with its parliament, law-courts, and laws, who were all of them united under one king; see the records in the old Swedish laws, Sveriges Gamla Lagar, as edited by Unger, as also the classical account given of lagman Thorgny in Ö. H. i. 71.—I hverri þessi deild landsins er sitt lögþing, ok sin lög, yfir lögmen ok lögmaðr, ... þat skulu lög vera sem hann réð upp at; ef konungr, eða jarl, eða byskupar fara yfir land ok eigu þing við lögmaðr, svara lögmaðr af heandi búenda ...; aðrir lögmenn allir skulu lögmen þess lögmanns er á Tiunda-landi er, Ö. H. 65. 2. Norway the political institutions of the old patriarchal ages were disturbed through the wars and conquest of Harald Fairhair; the laws of Norway too have been preserved in a much more complete state than those of Sweden; of some of the most interesting only the eccl. section has been preserved, often in Icelandic or abridged. The most interesting records of the lagmen are not to be found in the Norse laws, but in the Sagas, e. g. the Hák. S. Gamla, ch. 71–80, 85–97 (in the Flatey book), in the Þinga-páttir in Fms. vii. 123–150, and in stray passages in other Sagas, in such phrases as lögmen ok konungr, lögmenn, lögmaðr, lenda menn ok lögmenn ok alla alþýðu, Eg. 352. 3. The Middle Age in Norway, and in Icel. after 1280, the lagman is a justice, who presided in the court lögretta, at the lögþing passim. 4. in the Icelandic Commonwealth, the officer who has been described above was specially called lög-sögu-maðr; lögmaðr is only used = lagamaðr = a lawyer,—*þat er ok, at þu skal svá górla þáttu alla upp segja, at engi viti einna miclogi honum vinski eigi fróðleikr til þess, þá skal hann eiga stefnu um lögmenn (lawyers, men skilled in law), en næstu dægr áðr, eðr Gr. i. 2, 3; þat skal allt hafa er finnsk á skrá þeirri er Háfiði er þat eitt af annarra lögmanna fyrirsögn (of other lawyers) til þvi í gegn, 7; Njáll var lögmaðr svá mikill (so great a lawyer), eingi fannsk hans jafningi, Nj. 30. At the union with Norway (1272) the lög-sögu-maðr of the Commonwealth was replaced by the men of the Norse kind, so that in the Sagas composed after 1272, e. g. the Grettla or in Sagas preserved in later transcripts, the lagman now and then confounded, and 'lögmaðr' was, by way of convenience, used of the lög-sögu-maðr of the old Commonwealth, cp. Gr. i. 115, 173, 191 new Ed., Nj. 24, 164, 237 (v. l.), Eg. 597, Ísl. ii. 208, 238, 256, Ísl. i. (Hungrv.) 62, Fms. iv. 115, 176, Ísl. i. 208. H. edition has the true reading, being made from a vellum of the Commonwealth time. 5. two instances are recorded in the 10th century in Iceland, where a lögmaðr occurs as a county sheriff or officer, viz. in the Háv. S. (begin.) and the Gr. ch. 10; but both records seem to be spurious and adapted to things in Norway, for neither Saga is preserved in its pure text, but remoulded after the union; see Maurer's Entstehung d. Stes. Beiträge, 136 sqq. In Scandinavia during the Middle Ages the power of the king increased, so that of the old lagman little last died away. In England it is preserved in the Speaker of the House of Commons, whose very name recalls to mind the law of the old Scandinavian communities. ## M (mm), the twelfth letter of the alphabet, was in the oldest Runic letters (the Golden horn, the stone in Tune) figured M, and in the common Runes ϥ and ϥ, whence later, the top being left ϥ and ϥ; all these forms being clearly derived from the old ϥ. Its ancient name was maðr (a man)—maðr er moldar-auki, in a Runic poem; but the likeness of ϥ to a man with uplifted hands is accidental.

SPELLING, CHANGES.—The m is sounded as in English and other Runic languages: it is usually single in the words fim=five, um=from=fram, but erroneously, for it is sounded double, agreeing with the etymology. Changes: 1. peculiar to the Northern Runic is the interchange of mn and fn when both letters are radical; mn, nemna,=nafn, nefna; smn, samna,=safn, safna; jamn=jumna, sömn,=sofna, svefn; hemna=hefna; stamn=stafr; stomn=stam; hramn=hrafn: the oldest Icelandic vellums frequently use the mn, namn, samna, hramn, jamn, but more rarely in other instances, Blas 46; emni, Arna-Magn. 302. 3; somna, MS. 623. 34; sömn, J. H. L. 82, 83; sjömn, Pd. 14; it is still sounded instead of fn önd, as in hefnd, proncd. hemd, Hom. 7, 18; stemdi=stefndi: the h prevailed in the Icel., and is used in the Editions, as also in mod. usage: on the other hand, the Swedish has throughout adopted m; thus, Swed. bamm=Icel. höfn, Engl. baven; Swed. lämna=Icel. þan. leyna; Swed. ämne=Icel. efni; each language has taken care without regard to etymology, for in some of the words f is used in others m.

2. otherwise m and f seldom interchange, as the threefold form of the particle of, um, umb; himinn, himneskr, lunn, hifneskr; nema (nisi), cp. Goth. niba; hvilmt and hvilft, as also Mal-kólfr=Mal-kolmr, þjálf and þjálm, skelmir and skelm. II. in vellums m is dropped in the 1st pers. plur. of the pron. vér, vit, thus höfu vér, eigu vit, but in mod. usage vi; hence comes the Norse form mér (plur.), mit (dual), by an interchange of the v and substitution of the final m from the preceding v: in öllu-megin, báðu-megin, etc., see megin. In old vellums Q is used to mark a double m, thus frammi=frammi; in most medial or final m is marked by a stroke above the line. The u is often used for the word maðr.

maðr, ad. to become maggoty, Stj. 91: maðkaðr, part. maggoty. KR. m. [Ulf. mada=μαδά; A. S. madu; O. H. G. mado; maðe, an augmented form, Engl. maggot, qs. madog; Dan. mak, Norse makk, Ivar Aasen; Scot. mauch]:—a maggot, grub, a divergarnir höfðu kviknat sem maðkar í holdi ýmis . . . ok maðkar, Edda 9; vall hann allr möðukm í hel, Rb. 414; maðka, Fb. ii. 78; síðan hitti þorbjörn í maðka-sjó sem liggir Vandi. . . . ok maðkr ás smó neðan skipit til úfæru, A. A. 198; er drögu vér maðka digirari manns læri, Al. 174, Stj. 91, Sks. 50; of an insect; ámu-maðkr, a rain worm; sjó-maðkr, sea worms, id. 438; skel-maðkr, worms with shells, id. maðka-veita, u. id. of maggots.

sjór, m. a sea full of worms, þorf. Karl. 438. smoginn, part. worm-eaten, of drift timber, ships.

A. R. m., qs. mann-r, which form also occurs in old poets, engi rannvi, Vellekla, (for the change of nn before r into ð see the addition to letter N); gen. manns, dat. manni, acc. mann, plur. menn, er; with the article, mennir, so always in old writers, but in mennir erroneously, as if from mennir: the plur. meðr, answer to sing. maðr, occurs in old poets—meðr vituð öðling aðra, Fms. 37, n. a verse; Norð-meðr róa naðri, vi. 309 (n. a verse); meðr úkitt veðr, Edda 102; hírd-meðr, veðja, Rekst., all verses of the 12th centuries; er meðr Myrkvíð kalla, Akv. 5; meðr hlutu 75 new Ed. (n. a verse): gen. pl. manna, dat. mönnum, acc. menn. In Ballads and Rímur after the 15th century, and hence in eccl. of later times, a nom. mann is now and then used, esp. in compds and by Germ. and Engl., e.g. hreysti-mann, Skíða R. 58; or hake of rhyme, ætla þú ekki, áumr mann | af komast muni hann, Pass. 14, 17: [Ulf. manna=άνθρωπος; in other Teut. spelt man, or better mann.]

A. man=Lat. homo, Gr. άνθρωπος, also people; eigi víl ek manninn þvíat mér er maðrinn skyldur, þat er frá manni at maðr er vel auðigr at fé, Nj. 51; mennskr maðr, a manlike man being, opp. to giants or beings of superhuman strength, Gm. er hér komnir er menn skal kalla, en líkari er þeir þursum þok sýn en mennskum mönnum, Eg. 110; afþjóm núl ekki er me um at eiga, Nj. 97; þat hafa gamlir menn mælt, at þess manns líf er verð af hann félli á grúfu, Eg. 107; þeir ungu menn (the ple) elskask sín í millum, Mar.; þótt nokkut væri þústr á með grum mönnum, Ld. 200; þjóldi manns, múgr manns, Fms. ii. 31. 245; þykkir mönnum nokkur várkunni til þess, 192; var

G. L. i. 42. mar-liðendr, part. pl. 'sea-sliders', sea-farers; margir eru marliðendr, many there are who slide over the sea, of witches, spirits, Eb. 44, a saying.

marmari, a, m. [Lat. word], marble, Stj. 46, Róm. 342, Sks. 188, Bs. ii. 103; marmara-grjót, -steinar, slabs of marble, Symb. 57, Str. 5, Karl. 14. mar-mennill, m., thus Landn. 76, 77; mar-mendill, Fas. ii. 31 (thrice); in popular mod. usage in Icel., mar-bendill; the Hauksbók (Landn. l. c.) spells it margmelli; whence the mod. Norse marmale, Ivar Aasen:—prop. a 'sea-mannikin', a kind of sea goblin or sea dwarf, in the Norse fairy tales. The marmennil is now and then hooked by fishermen; being a soothsayer, he tells them what is to happen. The classical passages in old Icel. writers are the Hálf's S. ch. 7 and the Landn. 2, ch. 5; for mod. times see Maurer's Volks. 31, 32, as also Ísl. Þjóðs. i. 131-134. Inseparable from these tales is the merman's 'laugbtir'; he generally laughs thrice, e.g. the king kisses the queen, beats his dog, and stumbles over and curses the mound, at each of which the merman laughs; and being asked why, he says that he laughs at the king's foolishness, for the queen is false, but the dog is true and will save his life, and in the mound there is a hidden treasure; hence, þá hló marbendill, then the merman laughed, has in Icel. become proverbial of a sudden, unreasonable, and spiteful fit of laughter. The coincidence with the English legend of Merlin the 'wild man' in the romance of Merlin, (edited by the Early Engl. Text Soc. 1869, p. 434,) is very striking; and one is tempted to suggest that the name Merlin may have been borrowed from the Norse sea goblin (who in Norwegian tales is said to be the bastard of the sea monster hafstramb and a mermaid), and tacked on to the Welsh legend: even the word has a Norse or Teutonic sound: Merlin may well be shortened from the dimin. mer-mann-lin, mer-m'lin, merlin: according to the Pref. to this Engl. romance the name is not found attached to the Welsh legend till the 12th century. compds: marmendils-smíði, n. the mermannikin's work = millepora polymorpha. marmendils-þari, a, m. the merman's weed = corallina officinalis, Maurer's Volks.

mið-garðr, m. [in Cumberland three farms, High-garth, Middle-garth Low-garth], the 'mid-yard,' 'middle-town,' i. e. the earth, a mythol. word common to all ancient Teut. languages; thus Ulf. renders the Gr. κοῦμην by miðjungarðs; Hel. calls the earth miðil-garð; the A. S. homilies instead of earth say middan-geard (meddler, Jamieson), and use the word as an appellation; but the Icel. Edda alone has preserved the true mythical bearing of this old Teut. word.—The earth (Miðgarðr), the abode of men, is seated in the middle of the universe, bordered by mountains and surrounded by the great sea (úthaf); on the other side of this sea is the Út-garð (out-yard), the abode of giants; the Miðgarð is defended by the 'yard' or 'burgh' Ás-garð (the burgh of the gods), lying in the middle (the heaven being conceived as rising above the earth). Thus the earth and mankind are represented as a stronghold besieged by the powers of evil from without, defended by the gods from above and from within; see Vsp. 4, Gm. 41, Edda 6, 25, 26, 35; mankind is said to abide 'undir Miðgarði,' under the Midgard, Hbl. 23; mest manna-val undir Miðgarði, Hdl. 11, 16, Fms. vi. 423 (in a verse); um allan Miðgarð, Blanda. In old Icel. translations of legends Leviathan is rendered by Miðgarðsormr, Níðst. 3, Post. 686 C. 2. The god Thor is called Miðgarðs-veórr, m. = the boly one of M., Vsp.; miðgarðs verjandi, the defender of Midgard, Edda 53; cp. þórr hefir varðan Miðgarð af þrek, Edda (in a verse). II. MINN, f., mín, n., mitt, poss. pron.: —in the possessive pronoun minn, þinn, sinn (meus, tuus, suus), mod. usage pronounces i long (f) before one consonant, but short (i) before a double consonant, and accordingly all modern editions of old writers make a distinction in the root vowel, thus, minn, minnar, minni, minna, þá mín, mínar, mínar, mínun; whereas the ancients pronounced i throughout, as is seen from Thorodd, who distinguishes between the short i in minna (memorare) and the long i in minna (memorum), Skálda 163; and still more clearly from rhymes, mítt and hvíti, Bjarn. 63; minn (meum) and sína, Arnór (Orkn. 104); mítt, fritt, and mítt, sítt, Völs. B. Mine and my=Lat. meus, in countless instances: the possessive pronoun is usually put after the noun, bróðir minn, faðir minn; for the sake of emphasis only can it stand before, minn hama, Þkv. 3; minn hróttinn, Skm. 3; minn Sigurðr, Gkv. i. 18; mínas málvinar, 20; minu þölvu, id.; minir bræðr, 2, 3; minn herra, Fms. vii. 197; minar eru orginar þungar sem bly, Sturl. (in a verse): in eccl. writers, perhaps influenced by Luther's Bible, this use has increased, and is freq. in the N. T., Pass., Vidal.; in popular speech, however, the old usage still holds good, (cp. Engl. mother mine, etc.) 2. in addressing, my dear! Jón minn! Sigrífr mín! móðir mín! bræðir mín! etc. III. as neut. subst. mítt; [Gr. τὸ μὲν; Lat. meum]:—mine, my part; skal ek ekki mitt til spara, mine, all I have, Nj. 3; malit hefi ek mitt, I have done my share, Gs. 16. III. ellipt. usage; eru slíkar minar, such are mine (viz. affairs), Ísl. ii. 245.

MJÖLL, f., gen. mjallar, dat. mjöllu, Rm. 26, Völs. R. 1. 3; [perh.
akin to mjöl, although with a double l]:—fresh powdery snow; sá snjór er hvítast er, ok í logni fellr, ok mjöll er kallaðr, Bárð. 2 new Ed.;

'swan-drift' = the waves, Lex. Poët. II. a pr. name of a lady, Landn. mjalla-hvitr, adj. = mjallhvitr, white as drifted snow.

Mjöllnir, m., in the vellums spelt mjollnir, with o and ll (see Bugge in the foot-note to Vpm. 51); the ll seems to indicate that the n is radical, for if it were inflexive, it would be mjolnir (with one l): [therefore the derivation from mala or mola (to crush), though probable, is not certain; the word may be akin to Goth. milbma = cloud, Swed. moln, Dan.
mølme; cp. provinc. Norse molnas (Ivar Aasen) = to grow dark from bands of cloud arising]:—the name of Thor's hammer, Edda passim, Ls.

MJÖT, f. [Ulf. mitaps = μέτρον; O. H. G. mez; Germ. masz]:—a measure; kann ek mála mjöt, I know the measure of words, how to make a speech, Höfuðl. 20; þess kann maðr mjöt, a man knows the measure of that, Bugge's Hm. 60 (see foot-note as to the reading in Cod. Reg.); mjötuðr, from Vsp. the preceding poem, seems to have been in the transcriber's mind, and so he first wrote mjotvpc and then dotted the v, denoting that the last three letters were to be struck out. A fem. mjotuð would, it is true, agree with the Goth. mitaps, but it does not suit the rhythm, in which a monosyllable is required.

mjötuduðr, m., spelt mjotviðr, Vsp. 2, which form can only be an error of the transcriber, for both passages, verses 2 and 47, represent the same word; [A.S. metoð; Hel. metoð; by which word the A.S. homilies, as well as the Heliand, denote God, prop. the 'Meter,' Dispenser]; the word itself is of heathen origin: in the Icel. it only occurs in old poets, and there in but a few passages, all of which agree, if rightly interpreted, with the A.S. use of the word. It occurs twice in the Vsp.: in verse 47.—Leika Míms synir, en mjötuðr kyadisk, but the meotud is kindled, lighted, where it seems to be applied to the god Heimdal, (the dawn in the Eastern sky, the morning star? see Prof. Bergmann in his Ed. of Gm. 1871, p. 169); in verse 2,—nú man ek heima, nú iðiðjur, mjötuð mæran fyrir mold neðan, I mind the nine abodes, the nine giants (the nine mothers of Heimdal?), the worthy Dispenser beneath earth; this 'meotud beneath earth' seems here to represent the god of the nether world, the Pluto of the Northern mythology, with whom all things above originated (Heimdal?); somewhat similar views are expressed in the Platonic Dialogue Axiochus, ch. 12 and 13.

2. sá er hann með mönnum mjötuðr, such a guardian (belper) is he among men, Fsm.

II. metaph. and in an evil sense, weird, bane, meotud is glossed by bani (a bane), Edda (Gl.) ii. 494; meotud Heimdals, the bane of Heimdal = the head; Heimdalar höfuð heitir sverð ... sverð heitir manns-mjötuðr, a sword is the bane of men, Edda 55, from a myth that Heimdal was pierced by a head (used as a bolt): nema mjötuðr spilti, unless death spoiled her, unless she died, Og. 14; ef mér meir m. málrúm gæfi, if death would give me more time for speech (says the dying Brynhild), Skv. 3. 71; sá manns mjötuðr, this bane of men, of a charmed, poisoned sword, Fas. i. (in a verse). The word is found only in the above passages; the explanation given in Lex. Poët. can hardly be the true one. For Hm. 60 see mjöt above.

So in Lat. phrases, in manu parentis, manumissio, etc., used of minors, slaves. In Norse the word is used in a special sense.]

B. In the ancient laws and customs matrimony was a bargain (brúð-kaup), hence the phrase to buy a wife, kaupa konu; the wooing was often performed by a deputy, and at the espousals (festar) a sum was agreed on, which the bridegroom was to pay for his bride. This sum was called mundr; and this transaction between the damsel's father or guardian and the other party was called mundar-mál or mund-mál, e. g. Nj. ch. 2, Möðr (the father) svarar, hugsað hefi ek kostinn, hón (i. e. my daughter, the damsel) skal hafa sextigi hundraða, ok skal aukask þriðjungi í þínum garði: hence the phrases, kaup mey mund, to buy a maid by mund; mey mundi keypt; gjalda mund, Skv. i. 30, Fm. 41, N. G. L. i. 27, 48, Am. 93, and passim. No marriage was lawful without the payment of mund, for even if the wedding had been lawfully performed, without such previous payment of mund the sons of such a wedlock were illegitimate, and were called hornung (q. v.),—hann kallaði ykkir fríllu-sonu,—Hárekr sagði at þeir mundi vitni til fá at móðir þeirra var mundi keypt, Eg. 40; the least amount of mund in Norway was twelve ounces, called the poor man's mund (öreiga mundr), N. G. L. i. 27, 54; in Iceland it was a mark, sá maðr er eigi arfgegnr er móðir hans er eigi mundi keypt, mörk eða meira fé, Grág. (Kb.) i. 222. On the wedding night the stipulated mund became the wife's personal property, and thus bears some resemblance to the 'morning-gift' (morgun-gjöf) of the later legislation; þá er hjú koma í eina sæng, at þá er konu heimill mundr sinn ok svá vextir af fé því öllu er henni er mælt í mundar-málum, Grág. i. 370. The wife herself or her parents might, in case of divorce after misconduct, call on the husband to pay up the mund and the heiman-fylgja (q. v.) of which he had the charge, Grág. Festap. ch. 51; ella mun ek láta nefna mér váttu nú þegar, ok segja skilti við þik, ok mun ek láta föður minn heimta mund minn ok heiman-fylgiu, Gisl. 16 (p. 32 in Mr. Dasent's Gislir the Outlaw), cp. also Yngl. The mundr therefore was different to the dowry (heiman-fylgja), and has nothing answering to it in the modern law, nor perhaps in the old Greek or Roman customs; hence Tacitus speaks of it as something strange, dotem non uxori marito, sed maritus uxori affert, Germ. ch. 18. On the other hand, the Teutonic rites of marriage call to mind the ancient patriarchal times as described in Gen. xxiv and xxix. The etymological connection between mundum = tutelage and the Norse word is not altogether clear. In modern Icelandic usage heiman-mundr is erroneously used instead of heiman-fylgja, q. v.

In tales mice are said to pass over rivers on cakes of cow-dung (skán), steering with their tails, see Eggert Itin. ch. 349, and Ísl. þjóðs., which reminds one of the witch who sails 'like a rat without a tail' in Shakespeare's Macbeth. For the fabulous tales of wizards keeping a flæðar-mús that it may always provide them with money see Maurer's Volks; when the wizard dies, the mouse breaks loose into the sea and a tempest arises, called Músar-byllr, mouse-tempest; that a similar superstition existed in olden times may be inferred from the name Músa-Bölverkr, Landn. 2. Múspell, n. the name of an abode of fire; in the old mythology peopled by Múspells lýðir, the men of Muspell, a host of fiends, who are to appear at Ragnarok and destroy the world by fire; the prose in Edda 3 may have been derived from some lost verses of the Völuspá, for the name appears at the end of that poem (Vsp. 51) as if it were already known; it occurs nowhere else in the Norse mythical songs, except in Ls. 42 (múspells-megir). Múspells-heimr, the abode of Múspell, Edda 4. This interesting word was not confined to the Norse mythology, but appears twice in the old Saxon poem Heliand—mutspell cumit on thiustra naht, also thiof mer, m. comes in dusky night, as a thiof fares, i. e. but the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, 2 Pet. iii. 10; and mutspellis megin obar man ferit, the main of m. fares over men, see Schmeller's Edition; a third instance is in an Old High German poem on the Last Day—dár ni mac denne mac andremo helfan vora demo muspille = there no man can help another against the muspell-doom. In these instances muspell therefore stands for the day of judgment, the last day, and answers to Ragnarok of the Northern mythology. The etymology is doubtful, for spell may be = the weird, doom, = Lat. Fatum; or it may be = spoil, destruction; the former part mut or muod is more difficult to explain. The Icel. mús is an assimilated form.

MÚTA, u. f. [Ulf. mōta = τελώνιον; O.H.G. mūta; Germ. maut (Schmeller); cp. MÖRK, f., gen. sing. merkr, pl. merkr, [a word common to all Teut. languages]:—a mark, in weight equal to eight ounces or half a pound; twenty merkr make a fjörðung, q. v.; eighty merkr = a vætt; þat er löppundari at átta fjörðungar eru í vætt, en tuttugu merkr skolu í fjörðungi vera, Grág. i. 499. 2. a mark, by weight or value, of gold and silver, eight ounces (átta aurar) go to a mark, 732. 16; mörk silfrs, mörk gulls, þrim mörkum gulls, Fms. vii. 235, Grág., Sagas passim; mörk vegins silfrs, O. H. L. 23; gullhringa ok stóð mörk hvárr, Eg. 464: often used absol. so that the standard can only be seen from the context, verðr hann útlagr þrem mörkum, Grág. i. 16, 132; varðar honum þat sex merkr, tólf merkr, 319; varðar þat þriggja marka sekð, 499; hversu mikit fé er þetta? hann sagði hundrað marka, Nj. 4; Adalsteinn vill gefa skilling manni hverjum frjálsbornum, en mörk sveitar-höfðingja hverjum, Eg. 280; hann skal gjalda hálfa mörk fyrir eyri, Grág. i. 208; þrjú hundrað hundraða eptir forngildu marka-tali, Dipl. v. 20; svá mikit ofa-fé at traukt kom marka-tali á, Fær. 11; hann var svá auðigr af gulli at engi vissi marka-tal, Fms. vi. 176; merkr-kaup, a purchase to the amount of a mörk, Gpl. 497; merkr-þjófr, a thief to the value of a mark, N. Mr. Dasent's Essay in Burnt Njal. In Icel. the confusion was made still greater, by the fact that (as remarked s. v. eyrir) the word mörk was also used of the wadmal standard (the ell of wadmal), and so the law speaks of a mörk vadmála, Grág. i. 500; mörk sex . . . álma aura, etc., K. þ. K. 70, 172, but this is a contradiction in terms, for mörk is a weight, not a measure: the real meaning is often only to be made out by the context, e. g. in questions of weregild the weighed mark is no doubt meant. II. of fluid, a pint, viz. half a pottr; in mod. usage all fluids and vessels holding fluids are thus measured, tveggja, þriggja . . . marka askr.

G. mantal]:—a mantle; occurring as early as Kormak, but not used elsewhere by old poets, although freq. in t Sagas, Fms. i. 211, ii. 280, xi. 275, Fs. 60, Nj. 28, Fb. i. 20, ii. 13 Fær. 264, 266; the möttull was worn by both men and women; skikk which is the genuine Norse word, seems to be synonymous with möttu thus skikkja, Fagrsk. 115 (line 25), is called möttull, 117 (line 24): möttull was prob. a short light mantle, fastened by strings (tuglar) round the neck, whence it was called tugla-möttull, Fb. ii. 130, Fær. 263, möttull á tuglum, and it seems usually to have been of foreign cut and costly foreign stuff (a purple mantle is mentioned in Fagrsk. l. c.) ## N

N (enn), the thirteenth letter, is in the old Runes represented on the Golden Horn by the character  $\text{𐌺}$ , on the stone in Tune by  $\text{𐌺}$ , and in the later Runes by  $\text{𐌺}$  or  $\text{𐌺}$ , all derived from the Lat.-Gr.  $\text{N}$ . It was called naud (need, A. S. nead), naud görir neppa kosti, Runic poem. In ancient MSS. the capital N or the A. S.  $\text{H}$  is used to mark a double n, thus, naþ, keþa, =mann, kenna.

PRONUNCIATION.—The n is sounded as in other Teut. languages; but n after a diphthong has a peculiar sound like dnb, thus steinn hreinn = seidnh hreidnh; whereas, after a single short vowel the sound is as usual, ann, mann; this ndb sound does not seem to be ancient, as may be seen from rhymes such as, seinn þykki mér sunnan, Sighvat: a confusion between rn and nn first appears in MSS. of the 15th century; e.g. eirn hreinn, = einn hreinn, and so in early print: before t the n is spirant, vint = vinht, cp. introduction to letter L.

CHANGES.—The nn before r in olden times was often changed to nd and sounded as ð, not only in maðr, suðr (= mannr, sunnr), öðrum, öðir, aðrar (from annarr), miðr (= minnr), in which cases it is still sounded so; but also in saðr, muðr, brúðr, fiðr, meðr, uðr, guðr, kuðr, sannr... kunnr; tveðr = tvennr, gryðri = grynri, Bs. i. 342, 349; ðrar = sannrar, Greg. 23, Líkn. 3: it is so used in rhymes by the poets; in all these latter instances the nn has reappeared in mod. usage; e.g. Engl. moutb = munnr, but sunna (the sun). May not the change of the participles in -ðr into -inn (Gramm. p. xxiv, col. 2) be due to the same phonetic principle, but in inverted order? The n is elided in inn-mikit, sounded and spelt jam-mikit; jam-góðr = jamn-góðr: —nn for nd, in sunz = sunds, lanz = lands, munnaug = munndaug; bundnir, undnir = bundnir and spelt so, Edda i. 240. In some words the nn is due to assimilation, as that of zn in rann, Goth. razna; but often of np or nd in the cognate Teut. languages, thus Icel. nenna, Goth. nannþjan; finna, Engl. find, or the absorption of final and medial n see Gramm. p. xxx, col. 1.

For words with a radical b (bn) see under H.

The ancient Teutons and Scandinavians used but one name, for nicknames are rare or of later date, and perh. came into use through contact with foreigners, as with the Gaelic tribes in the west, for in the Landn. such names abound in Icel., though they were afterwards disused; the law makes it a case of outlawry to 'give names', ef maðr gefir manni nafn annat en hann eigi áðr ok varðar fjörbaugs garð, ef hann reiðisk við, Grág. (Kb.) ii. 182, see however nafn-festr below. For illustration see lists of names subjoined to the Editions of the Sagas, Landn., Bs., Fms., Fb. iii, *Espól. NEKKVERR, indef. pron.; this word is a compound of the negative particle né (q. v.) and the pronoun hverr, qs. nih-hverr, ne-hverr, nekkverr; the double k (in the oldest MSS. often represented by q) may be due to the final b of the particle, as the compd was formed at a time when the final b had not been absorbed into né: [Dan. nogen; Swed. någon.]

A. THE FORMS: this pronoun has undergone great changes. The earliest declension is the same as that of hverr, see Gramm. p. xxi; nekkverr, nekkver, Bs. i. 353, Greg. 13, 26, 33, Grág. ii. 205, 206, 304, Fms. x. 389, 393; gen. nekkvers, nekkverrar, passim; dat. nekkverjum, nekkverju, nekkverri, Greg. 16, 79, Eluc. 27, Bs. i. 352; acc. nekkver, nekkverja, Grág. i. 41, ii. 251, 270, 313, Fms. x. 381, 390, 391, Greg. 15, Bs. i. 337, 344 (line 14), 352; nom. pl. masc. and fem. nekkverir, nekkverjar, Grág. ii. 205, Bs. i. 355; gen. nekkverra, Greg. 23, 28, and so on. The word then underwent further changes, a. by dropping the j; nekkveru, Grág. ii. 281; nekkverar, Fms. x. 381; nekkverum, 382; nekkvera, 393, 415. β. by change of the vowels; NAKKVERR or nekkvarr, or even NAKKVARR, nakkvat, see below; nakkvert, Bs. i. 342 (line 12); nakkvara, Ó. H. 62, 116; nakkvars, Fms. vii. 388, xi. 29, Edda 48; nakkvarir, Fms. vii. 337, Mork. 169; nakkvarar, Fms. vii. 328, Greg. 9; nakkvarra (gen. pl.), D. I. i. 185; nakkvarrar, Ó. H. 116; nakkverrar (gen. fem. sing.), Bs. i. 393. γ. the a of nakk through the influence of the v was changed into ö (nökk), and then into o, and the final v into vo, and in this way the word became a regular adjective, NÖKKVÖR or NÖKKVÖR, nökkvor, Mork. 57, Fms. x. 261; nökkvot, Bs. i. 393; nökkvöð, Mork. 62, Fms. x. 383, 391; nökkvors, passim; nökkvoru, Nj. 34, Fms. x. 393, 394; nökkvorum, 395; nökkvorrar, Edda i. 214; nökkvorn, 210; nökkvorir, Fms. vi. 5, x. 294. δ. the v dropped out; NÖKKORR, nökkorr, nökkorr, nökkor, Vsp. 33 (Bugge), Greg. 9, Grág. (Kb.) i. 66, 75, 208, ii. 3, Mork. 168, Ó. H. 224, Grág. i. 1, ii. 366, Nj. 267, Fms. ix. 276, x. 135; nökköð, Hkr. 2. 5; nökkort, Grág. i. 460; nökkorum, Skv. 3. 58 (Bugge), Grág. i. 45, 361, Fms. ix. 370, Nj. 7; nökkoru, Fms. i. 1, x. 420, Grág. ii. 129, Nj. 41, Eg. 394, Hkr. iii. 160; nökkorn, Fms. x. 409; nökkorn, xi. 6, Nj. 6, Mork. 205, Ld. 30; nökkorir, Mork. 205; nökkorar, Nj. 252, Fms. x. 388; see Gramm. p. xxi.

ε. finally in mod. usage we have contracted forms before a vowel, thus nökkir, nökkur, nökkarr, except that the gen. pl. and gen. fem. sing. are still pronounced as trisyllables, nökkurra, nökkurra; these contracted forms have erroneously crept into Editions from paper MSS. (as Vd. in the Fs.), where nökkir etc. should be restored to nökkurir. G G 2

etc. All the above forms occur confusedly even in very old MSS., and even the latest form nokkorr occurs in vellums as old as Cod. Reg. of the elder Edda, in the Mork., Gregg, Grág. (Kb.) In addition to the above, there are mixed forms, nekkurr, 623. 41; nekkorar, Fms. x. 388; nekkers, Grág. (Kb.) 22; nökkurja, 623. 50; nakkor, B.K. 124; nökkverja, Fms. xi. 6; naucverjar, navcveriorum, Mork. 62, 64, 65.

II. nakkvat, n. subst., answering to hvat (q.v.), Ó. H. 72, Bs. i. 344, 348, 350, 353, Am. 32, Bugge. 2. nökkvi (Lat. ali-quanto, an obsolete dat. (subst.) answering to hví; svá nökkvi, Hallfred (Fs. 80); í nökkvi, in augbt, Hom. 43; af nökkvi, for augbt, Fs. 94 (v. l.), Fms. iii. 27; noqvi, Hkv. 2. 26 (Bugge); nökkvi ofarr, Fms. vii. 304 (in a verse); nökkvi síðarr, ix. 533 (in a verse): in prose, nökkvi yngri, xi. 96; neykvi nær sanni, Hkr. iii. 360; nekkvi réttligar, 677. 11; nökkvi helst, Fms. xi. 78, MS. 677. 6; véla e-n í nökkvi, Grág. ii. 22, 367; því nökkvi, 129; nær sanni nökkvi, Fms. x. 420; neykvi, Am. 26 (Bugge); framast nekkvi.

III. the neut. sing. is thus distinguished; nakkvat, nökkvøð, nökkvøð (answering to hvat), are often used as a substantive, but nekkvert, nökkvort, nökkurt (answering to hvert), as an adjective. The primitive hvert has partly undergone the same metamorphosis as the compd nehverr, and in western Icel. is sounded kvur, and in mod. Norse dialect kor, shewing the complete change.

Niflungar, n. pl. the Niebelungen, of the Germ. tales; the older form hnißlungar (q. v.) shews that the word cannot be derived from nifl; the derivation in Edda 104, 105 (from king Nefir) is fanciful, and a later invention; hodd Niflunga (hnißlunga?) = Niebelungen bort, Akv.; Niflunga skattr, id.; Niflunga arfr, id., Bm.

Nikuðr, Nikuðs, Nikarr, m. one of the names of Ódin, Gm., Edda (Gl.); but, as suggested by Finn Magnusson in Lex. Mythol. s. v., it no doubt was originally the name of Neptune or a water-goblin, cp. Nykr.

NÍÐ, n. [Ulf. nei] = φθόνος; A. S. nið; O. H. G. nid; Germ. neid; Dan.-Swed. [nid]:—contumely, Vsp. 56; segja e-m nið, Akv. 35. 2. particularly as a law term, a libel, liable to outlawry:—of a libel in verse, yrkja, kveða nið um e-n, Nj. 70; ef maðr kveðr nið um mann at lögbergi ok varðar skóggang, Grág. (Kb.) ii. 184: the classical passages in the Sagas are Hkr. Ó. T. ch. 36, cp. Jónsv. S. ch. 13 (Fms. xi. 42, 43), Kristni S. ch. 4, Nj. ch. 45, Bjarn. 33 (the verse). Another and even graver kind of nið was the carving a person's likeness (tré-nið) in an obscene position on an upraised post or pole (nið-stöng), for an instance of which see Bjarn. 33; ef maðr görir nið um annan ok varðar þat fjörbaugs-garð, en þat er nið ef maðr skerr trénið manni eðr rístr eða reisir manni niðstöng, Grág. i. 147; when the post was set up, a horse's head was also put up, and a man's head was carved on the pole's end, with dire Runes and imprecations; all this is described in a lively manner in Eg. ch. 60 and Vd. ch. 34, Landn. 4. ch. 4, Rd. ch. 25. The beina-kerlinga-visur of mod. times are no doubt a remnant of the old niðstöng;—certain stone pyramids (varða) along mountain-roads are furnished with sheep's legs or horses' heads, and are called beina-kerling (bone carline); one of the most noted is on the Kaldadal, as one passes from the north to the south of Iceland, it is even marked in the map; a passing traveller alights and scratches a ditty called beina-kerlinga-visa (often of a scurrilous or even loose kind) on one of the bones, addressing it to the person who may next pass by; for a specimen see Bjarni 193, as also in poems of Jón Þorláksson, for there hardly was a poet who did not indulge in these poetical licences. In popular legends the devil always scratches his writing on a blighted horse's bone.

Noregr, m., gen. Noregs; a later Noregis also occurs in Laur. S.; [mod. Norse Norge, sounded Norre]:—Norway, passim; that the word was sounded Nóregr with a long vowel is seen from rhymes in Vellekla (10th century), Nóregr, fóru; as also Nóregs, stórum, Sighvat (in a poem of 1038 A. D.); the full form Norð-vegr (with ð and w) never occurs in vernacular writers, but only in the Latinised form, Norþwagía, which was used by foreign writers (North Germans and Saxons); even the v (Nor-vegr) is hardly found in good vellums, and is never sounded. The etymology of the latter part = vegr is subject to no doubt, and the former part nór is prob. from norðr, qs. the north way; yet another derivation, from nór = a sea-loch, is possible, and is supported by the pronunciation and by the shape of the country, a strip of land between sea and mountains, with many winding fjords. The popular but false etymology of the apocryphal is from a king Nór (Orkn. ch. 12), as Rome from Romulus:—Noregs-húðingir, -konungur, -menn, -ríki, -veldi, the ruler, king, men, kingdom of Norway, Grág. ii. 401, Fms. vii. 293, Bs. i. 720, Sturl. ii. 55, Nj. 8, Ísl. ii. 234, passim.

NÓTT, f., gen. nætr, pl. nætr; the old writers mostly spell this word thus (not nátt), agreeably with its mod. sound and form; this, however, is not a real ó, but a remains of the old umlaut ä (nótt); nom. nótt, Sdm. 26, Hkv. 1. 2, Vpm. 24, 25, Gkv. 2. 12, Skm. 42, Alm. 29, 30, Sks. 50 new Ed.: acc. nótt, Hm. 112; miðja nótt, Grág. Pétur; but in old vellums this form is not attested; for the Jd. 39, line 8 (sáttir á einni nóttu), is a mod. conjectural addition, as the vellum (Cd. Reg.) ceases at line 7 of that verse.

O—Ó

O, the fourteenth letter, is in the oldest Runes, on the stone in Tune, and on the Golden Horn figured by , which was evidently taken from the Greek Ω; the later common Runic alphabet in earlier monuments has no ó, but uses u or au instead, e.g. on the Jellinge stone in Denmark. Afterwards the Rune , or , appears under the name of óss in the Runic poems—óss er flestra ferða (= fjarða) = all firirs have an óss (mouth). The form was evidently taken from the A. S. Runic , which stands for a, and in A. S. is called ós, which answers, not to Norse óss (ostium), but to áss (= ans, i.e. the heathen gods); but the Norsemen or Danes in borrowing the Rune seem to have misinterpreted its name or mistranslated it from ignorance of the phonetic laws existing between the A. S. and the Norse. The  in Scandinavian Runic inscriptions is therefore a mark of later date (11th or 12th century).

B. PRONUNCIATION.—The o is either short (o) or long (ó); the former (o) is sounded like Engl. o in cod, the latter (ó) as in Engl. no, note; but the rules given at the beginning of the introduction to letter A (p. 1) apply equally to this letter, bōð being sounded bawth, but krōss in North. E. cross.

C. CHANGES.—In most of the oldest vellums o instead of u is used throughout in inflexions, -o, -or, -om, -on, -od, -of, -osk, -oll, -onn, instead of -u, -ur, -um. . . . . (Gramm. p. xxxv, col. 1, A); afterwards both forms are used indiscriminately, till in the 15th century the u prevailed, and has kept its place ever since; whether there was a difference in sound, and what, we are unable to state.

2. so also in a few root words, gōð, goll, fōgl, oxi, skolu, monu, hogr, togr, monr (Dan. mon), smogoll, = guð, gull, fugl, uxi, skulu, munu, hugr, tugr, munn, smugull; on the other hand, is sonr (a son), but sun the older form.

3. a and o or u interchange in the inflexions, fagnaðr, fognuðr, fögnuðr; kallan, kollon, köllun.

4. ú has changed into ó in the prefixed negative, ó-vitr for ú-vitr (unwise). 5. jú into jó, njóta, originally njúta; ljós, Swed. ljús: forms like mjókr for mjúkr, dókr for dúkr may also be found in vellums, but are very rare.

II. ó, the vowel-change of á (see p. 1), is frequently spelt o (tor, nott, = tór, nótt), but was in sound different from ó proper, and has since disappeared from the language, although remains of this 'umlaut' still exist in nótt, ól, spónn (= nótt, ól, spónn), but this o is sounded exactly like common o. So also o and ö are confounded in MSS., bornom = börnom = börnum. For the absorption of consonants see Gramm. p. xxx, col. 1, and the words themselves.

¶ Owing to the inability of the Scandinavian languages to sound v (w) before a vowel of the u class, several root words, which in dictionaries of the cognate languages (German, Engl.) begin with w, are in the Icelandic to be found under o, as okr, ord, orka, ormr, Öðinn, óðr, ósk, ómr; as also j, in ok (jugum), ostr, ok the conjunction.

O

odd-hagr, adj. skilled in wood-carving, Bs. i. 143, Fas. i. 292.

odd-hending, f. a metrical term, when the first rhyming syllable stands at the head of a verse; thus in baf-löður skelir the syllable 'haf' is an oddhending, Edda (Ht.) 121: in mod. usage, in Ballads (Rímur), it means two rhyming syllables in the first, and one in the second line, three being an odd number of rhyme syllables—thus, sveipaðr mund | á silki hrund | sat eg undir kvendi is an oddhending.

odd-hendr, adj. written in the metre oddhending, Edda 139.

odd-hvass, adj. sharp-pointed, Bs. ii. 172.

oddi, a, m. a triangle, a point or tongue of land, Landn. 294, v. 1; vaxinn með þremr oddum, Fms. x. 272.

III. freq. in local names, of a tongue of land; Oddi, Odda-staðr, whence Odda-verjar, m. pl. the men from Oddi:—as a pr. name, Oddi, Stjörnu-Oddi = Star-Oddi, Oddi the astronomer, an Icelander of the 12th century skilled in astronomy, from whom proceeded the computation called Odda-tal, n. the calculus of Oddi, Rb. 6. COMPS: odda-maðr, m. [Dan. op-mand, qs. skyldir sjálfir semja sættir sínar, en Rafn vera oddamaðr, ef þá skildi á Sturl. iii. 179. odda-tala, u, f. an odd number.

odd-viti, a, m. a leader, chief, who marches ahead, Hkv. Hjörv. 10 Hkv. 2. 10, Ó. H. 61, 214, Njörst. 108.

OF, prep. with dat. and acc., the form varies; umb is an obsolete and rare form, hence um, sounded umm, which is far the most common form in old writers, and has altogether superseded both umb and of: [the 'of' answers nearest to Ulf. uf; O. H. G. oba; Germ. ob; Gr. ὀνό; Lat. sub; Sansk. upa.] Most of the oldest vellums, as also the poets, prefer to use 'of'; yet not all, for the Cod. Reg. of Sæm. Edda in nine cases out of ten writes um, so also did the Cod. Acad. primus (the Kringla) of the Hkr.; and this is important, for these two vellums are our chief sources for old poetry; on the other hand, the Cod. Reg. of the Snorra Edda prefers 'of'. Among other vellums the old fragment of the Orkn. S. (Ama-Magn. No. 325) mostly uses 'of,' as of nóttina, Orkn. 110; of hans daga, 178; of Jól, 180; of daga þeirra bróðra, 182; but also 'um', e.g. ofan um silk, ofan um hann, id. The word will be given in full under letter U, so that a few references may suffice here:

I in the sense over, Lat. super, with dat. and acc., a. jörð grær of ágætum barma, Eg. (in a verse); brann of fylki, Yt.; of svirum, Hornklofi dik flæði of líkum, Fms. xi. 191; sjár þýtr of árum, vi. (in a verse) of bý breiðum, Lex. Poët. β. with acc., of nýt regin, Vpm. 13; of dróttmögum, 11; of liðu, Sdm. g; of sumar, Vsp. 40; of garð risa, Gs. of lopt ok lög, Hkv.; úlfir gengr of ynglings börn, Eg. (in a verse) vestr frá ek of ver, Höfuðl. 1; liggja of ungan Mörkúára, Fms. vi. (in a verse).

II. in a causal sense = Lat. ob; of sanna sök, for a just sake justly, Fms. ii. 322 (in a verse); of minna, for a less cause, Glúm. (in a verse); of litla sök, Lex. Poët.; of sannar deildir, id.; of minni sorgir Korm. (in a verse).

OF and um, an enclitic particle, chiefly placed before verbs or participles, seldom before nouns; it is obsolete, and occurs only in old poetry and now and then in the oldest prose; the spelling varies, for here too the Cod. Reg. of Sæm. Edda, as also the Kringla, mostly prefer um, so as to take examples from the poem Hm., um skoðask, um skygnask, 1; um getr, 8; um á (ouns), 9; þylsk hann um, um getr, 17; um farit, 18; sins um máls, 21; um gelr, 29; um þörf, 38; um getr, 58, 65; um dvelr, 59; um viðrtr, 74; um lagit, 84; um vakin, 100; um komin, um sofin, 101; um kominn, 104; um gaf, 105; um geta, 123; um heilli, 129; um reist, 145; um stendr, 154; um kann, 163; of gat, 140; of alinn, 72; of kom, 145; of vitaðr, 100; of blótið, 145; vf, vf boðit, 67; vf heimtr, 14: thus in this single poem 'um' occurs about twenty-four times, 'of' five times, and 'vf' twice: for the other poems see Bugge's Edition: on the other hand, of traddi, Gh. 2; of þrumir, Gm. 8; of hyggi, 34; at ek öllum öi yör of heita, Hým. 3; of geta, 4; of teknir, 14; of heitt, 32:—in prose, ef maðr má eigi of koma, Grág. ii. 209; of förlar, Kb. 14; of telrat, 178; er hédan of sér, Ísl. II. seldom before nouns; sins um máls, Hm. (see above); um þörf, 38; as hands of dólg, Skv.; Baldrs of barni, Haustl.; öll of rök, Alm. 9; of skópt, kinsmen, Edda (Gl.), Lex. Poët.; of tregi, Gkv. 1. 3 (thus Bugge in two words); þórs of rúni, Haustl.; of kúgi, an oppressor, Fms. vii. (in a verse); with adjectives, of reiðr, Skm.: it remains in some old sayings or phrases, án er fílt um gengi; um seinan, Nj. 91.

OF, adv. [this particle is closely akin to the prep. of; the extended form ofr (q. v.) is mostly used in compds, not singly, and answers to Gr. ὀνέπ, Lat. super, Engl. above]: 1. as subst. excess, pride, conceit; því at hón verðr eigi svá mikil, at þar munu of þitt allt í liggja.

O. copulative conj.; the mod. form is og, which appears in the 15th century MSS., but the word is usually in the MSS. written thus j.

unic inscriptions mostly have auk, which diphthongal form has conj. been changed into ok, but is retained in the adverbial auk en. As neither the stone in Tune nor the Golden horn happens to have the word, we are in the dark as to its earliest Scandinavian form. The particle ok is characteristic of the Scandinavian languages, as distinguished from the Germ. und, Engl. and; although this is more apparent than real, for the identity of ok with the Goth. copulative particle ja and ub, Hel. ja, has been conclusively demonstrated by Grimm, who also makes out an identity between Goth. ub, standing for bu, and Gr. na, Lat. -que; the metathesis of ub for bu is analogous to Lat. ac = Gr. καί. Grimm farther supports this etymology by comparing the Teutonic compounds ne-hu, Icel. contr. né, with Lat. ne-c = ne-que, which proves the identity of both the suffixed particles, the Lat. c or que and the Teut. ub. The Goth. ja is a compound = já-ub = 'immo-que'; the Norse ok, too, is prob. a compound particle, the j being dropped, and then já-ub contracted into aub = auk; the final guttural b (sounded as χ), instead of being absorbed by the preceding vowel, was hardened into the tenuis k. The negative verbal suffix -a and -að, the nominal suffix -gi, and the copula ok will thus all be derived from one root,—one of the many instances of the Protean transformations of particles, even the negative and positive being interwoven into the same word.

A. And, a copula between two or more nouns; f upphafi skapaði Guð himinn ok jörð, Edda (pref., Gen. i. 1); ríki ok konungdóm, Fms. i. 23; mikill ok sterkr, Nj. 2; væn kona ok kurteis ok vel at sér, i.; dætr þrjár ok sonu þrjá, 30. If the nouns are many the usage may vary:—the nouns may be paired off, eldr ok vatn, járn ok málmr, Edda 36; or the copula is only put to the last, eldr, vatn, járn ok málmr; or, if emphatic, it may be reiterated, eldr ok vatn ok járn ok málmr; or ok may be left out altogether, málmr, steinar, jörðin, víðir, sóttir, dyrin, fuglarnir, eitrorinnar, Edda l. c.

2. bæði ok, bæði er ham vitr ok framgarn, Nj. 6. 3. in comparison, as, and, = Lat. ac, atque; með jöfnum skildaga ok Hrólfir Kraki gördi, Fb. ii. 137; samr maðr ok áðr, the same man as before, i. 364; hafa með sér sín epli, ok bera saman ok hin, and compare them and the others, Edda 46; hún var þá lílik ok fyrr, Fms. i. 185; þat er mjök sundleitt ok Kristnir menn göra, it differs much from what Christians do, x. 171; á sömu leið ok fyrr, i. 253; samsumars ok Steingerðr gekk frá Bersa, Korm. 160; jamvandhæfr ok fjörbaugsmaðr, Grág. i. 89.

4. of an adverbial character, and yet, but; mörgum sárum ok engum stórum, Fms. x. 370; þetta eru áheyriligr boð, ok úfajnligr, Nj. 77; úsællig kona ertú, ok (but yet) ekki svá at eigi megi sæma við slíkt, Fms. vii. 167.

5. the particle ok connects together the parts of the sentence; þá mælti Frigg, ok spurði, then spoke Frigg, and asked, Edda 37; at þú bættir ráð þitt, ok bæðir þér konu, thou shouldst mend thy condition, and take thee a wife, Nj. 2:—it is used to mark the progress of a speech or sentence, féllusk Ásum orðtök ok svá hendr, ok sá hver til annars, ok vóru allir með einum hug til þess er unnit hafði verkit; Loki tók Mistiltein, ok sleit upp, ok gekk til þings... Höðr tók Mistiltein, ok skaut at Baldri; Æsir tóku lík Baldrs, ok fluttu til sjávar, Edda 37; sendu þeir Ívar til hans, ok skyldi hann vita, Fms. x. 27.

II. in the old law (the Grág.) the apodosis or conclusion is headed by ok, then, as in the standing phrase, ok verðr hann útlagr, ok varðar þat... marka útlegr, and he shall pay, i. e. then be shall...; þeir menn er sakir eigu, ok skulu þeir ganga til dóms... and so in every page of the Grágás.

III. in some ancient epic poems the ok is as an historical particle put at the head of sentences or verses in a manner which closely resembles the use of the Hebrew v; the old Yt. is in this respect remarkable,—ok sikling, 1; ok salbjart, 2; ok sá brann, 3; ok Visbur, ok allvald, 4; ok landherr, 5; ok ek þess opt fregit hafðak, 6; ok allvald, 7; ok þat orð, 8; ok hnakkmar, 10; ok varð hinn, 11; ok Hagbarðs, 12; ok þrálifr... ok sveiðus, 13; ok löfsall, 14; ok Austmarr, ok við aur, ok dægjarn, 16; ok ljóshömun, 18; ok ofveg, ok sá frömuðr, 19; ok Ingjald, ok sjá urðr, 20; ok Skæreið, 22; ok nú ligger, 23; ok launsigr, ok buðlung, 24; ok um ráð, ok launsigr, 25; ok niðkvísl, 26;—so used about thirty times in this single poem; in other poems less freq., but yet it occurs, e. g. in the fragments of Vellekla, see also the references given s. v. auk (III).

IV. the placing the copula before both the parts to be joined is curious; this only occurs in a few instances in old poetry; ok einnar átta, 'and' one eight, i. e. one plus eight = nine, Hd. (composed about 986 A.D.); ok hárar ham-ljót, 'and boary scraggy' = boary and scraggy, Haustl.; ok Sörli þeir Hamðir, 'and Sorli Hamdir' = S. and H., Bragi; ok átta enni-tungl fjögur höfuð, 'and eight eyes four heads', i. e. four heads and eight eyes, id.; ok hörða blóthús, Rekst.; ok svá jarlar Ólafar, = jarlar ok svá Ólafar, Sigvat; ok hringa hlínar óþurft mína, the woe of her and myself, Kormak; ok há grasi víði = há grasi ok víði, Gm. 17; ok Elfar Gandvíkr miðli, Edda (Ht.) 1.

V. used as an interjection; þú skalt fara í Kirkjubæ—Ok, hvat skal ek þangat? Nj. 74; ok skaltu enn þora at mæla jöfnum orðum við mik, 656 B. 10: akin to this is the mod. usage in exclamations, wrath, wonder, indignation, og, hvað er nú að tarna! og, hvernig ætli þú látir! og, ekki nema það!

VI. the following are prob. ellipt.; segðu mér þat..., ok ek vilja vita, tell thou me that, and I wish to know = that which I want to know, Skm. 3; ætlar jarl at höggva þessa menn alla, ok þeir höfðu nú höndum á komit, all those, and (whom) they had got hold of, Fms. xi. 14.

B. Adverb; older form auk, q. v., [Germ. auch; Old Engl. eke]:—also; þat er ok, at, Grág. i. 36; hér eru ok tignar-klæði, Nj. 6; hann vaknar ok sem aðrir, Fms. xi. 117; svá mun ok, Hom. 142, and in countless instances old and mod., see auk; eigi ok, neither, Fms. x. 324; þáð er og, so so!

OK, n. [Goth. juk; A. S. geoc; Engl. yoke; O. H. G. job; Germ. joeb; cp. OKKARR, adj. pron., f. okkur, n. okkat and okkort, gen. pl. okkarra; contr. forms okkrir, okkrar, okkrum: [a Goth. uggvar is supposed, answering to iggvis; A. okkr, dat. and acc. dual, [Ulf. ugk, ugkis = ήμας, ήμιν]:—us, of two, in countless instances; the old writers make a strict distinction between dual and plur. (okkr oss, ykkir yðr, vit vér), whereas mod. Icel. in the spoken language has exclusively adopted the dual; thus Icel. say, hann sagði okkr, hann bað okkr; this use of the dual for the plur. is prop. a familiar way of speaking, regarding the speaker himself as the one, and 'the rest' as the other person; in writing the old distinction is still often observed.

Ó

Ó or ú, the negative prefix before nouns and verbs, [Goth., Engl., and Germ. un-; Dan. and Swed. ú-, the nasal being absorbed. The Icel. at a very early date changed this ú into ó, for the very oldest and best vellums use ó, not only the Greg., Eluc., Íb., the Miracle-book (Bs. i. 333 sqq.), but also the Grág., the Cod. Reg. of the Sám. Edda, etc.; in later vellums of the better kind ú and ó are used promiscuously; till about the union with Norway the ú prevailed, and is chiefly used in vellums of the 14th century; but in the 15th the ó again took its old place, and has been retained ever since, agreeably with the usual pronunciation. The ó is therefore the proper Icel. form, e. g. ó-vitr = Engl. un-wise; that it was sounded thus even in the 12th century is also shewn by the treatise of the second grammarian (Gramm. p. i, col. 1), — ó eðr ú þat skiptir orðum, svá sem er satt eðr ó-satt (ú-satt), Skálda 171. This change of spelling in the MSS. about (or a little before) the union with Norway cannot have been owing to any change in pronunciation, but was simply a Norwegianism, as were many other cases, e. g. the dropping the b before liquids, contrary to the Icel. pronunciation. On the other hand, as for the rest of Scandinavia, the ú has been retained in Denmark and in the east of Norway; but ó in the west and north of Norway (see Ivar Aasen's Dict.), as also in mod. Swed. (e. g. o-möjlig = Germ. un-möglich). In early Swed. (in the laws) u and o are used indifferently. The Orkneys seem to have followed the Icel., to judge from a rhyme in the poem Jd. composed by bishop Bjarni (died A. D. 1222), a native of the Orkneys, — ó-veitan mik státr, the metre of which requires a half rhyme, a rule followed strictly throughout that poem.

B. Of the compds with ú- or ó-, all but a few words are from un-; these exceptional words appear to be contractions, either, A. from ör-, where we have such double forms as ör-sekr and ó-sekr, N. G. L. i. 379; ör-viti and ó-viti, ó-verðr and ör-verðr, ó-vænn and ör-vænn, ör-hæfi and ú-hæfa, ör-keypis and ó-keypis, ú-dæmi qs. ör-dæmi (?), ó-bóta qs. ör-bóta (?), ó-birgr and ör-birgr; perh. also ú-helgi qs. ör-helgi, ú-heilagr qs. ör-heilagr; cp. also such words as ú-megin and ör-megna, ú-synja qs. ör-synja (?). B. from of, esp. before a labial or dental; thus, of-vægr and ó-vægr, of-frýnn qs. of-frýnn, ó-sköp = of-sköp (?), ó-freskr qs. of-freskr, ó-fyrirsynju qs. of-fyrirsynju (?), ó-hljóð or ú-hljóð qs. of-hljóð (?), of-dæll and ó-dæll, of-ljóss and ó-ljóss. In some of these instances doubt may arise, for a double set of compds might have sprung up. On the other hand, the great number of compds with ur-, er- in German and Saxon, and the scarcity of such words in the Norse tongue, lead to the conclusion that many of these compds in the course of time have been lost or replaced by ú-; cp. also of-alt and á-valt, (of-saka and á-saka, of-brýði and á-brýði, of-munir and á-munr, af-vöxtr and á-vöxtr, af-burðr and of-burðr). Since in most Editions the spelling with ú- has been adopted in these classes of words, they must be sought for under that head.

ÓÐAL, n., pl. óðul; in Norse MSS. it is usually contracted before a vowel (whence arose the forms öðli öðli), and owing to a peculiarity in the Norse sound of ð an r is inserted in contracted forms, öðla, öðlom, N. G. L. passim: [akin to aðal, öðli, öðli, = nature; öðlask = adipisci; öðlingr, q. v.; A. S. ðæl = patrimony; it is also the parent word of Germ. edel, adel, = noble, nobility, for the nobility of the earliest Teut. communities consisted of the land-owners. From this word also originated mid. Lat. allodium, prob. by inverting the syllables for the sake of euphony (all-od = od-al); odal or etel is the vernacular Teut. form, allodium the Latin form, which is never found in vernacular writers; it may be that the transposition of syllables was due to the ð sound in óðal; and hence, again, the word feudal is a compd word, fee-odal, or an odal held as a fee or fief from the king, and answering to heid-launað óðal of the Norse law (heid = fee = king's pay), N. G. L. i. 91.]

B. Nature, inborn quality, property, = aðal, öðli, q. v.; this seems to be the original sense, þat er eigi at réttu mannsins óðal, Sks. 326 B; þat er helzt byrjar til farmanns óðals, a seaman's life, 52; þat er kaupmanna óðal (= mercatorum est), 28; jörðum öllum óðal batni, Gh. 21.

II. A law term, an allodium, property held in allodial tenure, patrimony. The condition which in the Norse law constitutes an óðal was either an unbroken succession from father to son (er afi hefir afa leift) through three or more generations, N. G. L. i. 91, 237, Gpl. 284; or unbroken possession for thirty or more years, N. G. L. i. 249; or sixty years, Gpl. 284; or it might be acquired through brand-erfð (q. v.), through weregild, barn-fóstr (q. v.); and lastly heid-launað óðal, an allodial fief, was granted for services rendered to the king, see N. G. L. i. 91: the óðal descended to the son, and was opp. to útjárðir (out-lands), and lausafé (movables), which descended to the daughter, Gpl. 233; yet even a woman, e. g. a baugrygr (q. v.), could hold an óðal, in which case she was called óðals-kona, 92, jörð komin undir snúð ok snældu = an estate come under the rule of the spindle, N. G. L. i. 237; the allit. phrase, afri ok óðal, 31, Gpl. 250; brígða óðal, N. G. L. i. 86; selja óðal, to sell one's óðal, 237. The óðal was in a certain sense inalienable within a family, so that even when parted with, the possessor still retained a title (land-brígd, máldagi á landi). In the ancient Scand. communities the inhabited land was possessed by free óðalsmen (allodial holders), and the king was the lord of the people, but not of the soil. At a later time, when the small communities were merged into great kingdoms, through conquest or otherwise, the king laid hold of the land, and all the ancient óðals were to be held as a grant from the king; such an attempt of king Harold Fairhair in Norway and the earls of Orkney in those islands is recorded in Hkr. Har. S. Hárf. ch. 6, Eg. ch. 4, cp. Ld. ch. 2, Orkn. ch. 8, 30, 80 (in Mr. Dasent's Ed.); cp. also Hákr. S. Goða ch. 1. Those attempts are recorded in the Icel. Sagas as acts of tyranny and confiscation, and as one of the chief causes for the great emigration from the Scandinavian kingdoms during the 9th century (the question of free land here playing the same part as that of free religion in Great Britain in the 17th century). The attempt failed in Norway, where the old óðal institution remains in the main to the present day. Even the attempts of king Harold were, according to historians (Konrad Maurer), not quite analogous to what took place in England after the Conquest, but appear to have taken something like the form of a land-tax or rent; but as the Sagas represent it, it was an attempt towards turning the free odal institution into a feudal one, such as had already taken place among the Teutons in Southern Europe.

ÓÐINN, m., dat. Óðni; [A. S. Wodan; O. H. G. Wodan, in the Old High German song Phol ende Wodan vuoron zi holza; in the Norse the w is dropped, whence Óðinn]:—Ódin, Wodan, the name of the founder of the ancient Northern and Teutonic religion, who was afterwards worshipped as the supreme god, the fountain-head of wisdom, the founder of culture, writing, and poetry, the progenitor of kings, the lord of battle and victory; so that his name and that of Allföðr (Allfather, the father of gods and men) were blended together. For Ódin as an historic person see esp. Yngl. S., the first chapters of which were originally written by Ari the historian, who himself traced his pedigree back to Ódin. For the various tales of Ódin as a deity see the Edda and the old poems for the legends explaining how Ódin came by his wisdom, how he was inspired, how he pawned his eye in the well of Mimir, see Vsp. 22; how he hung in the world-tree Yggdrasil, Hm. 139 sqq.; and the most popular account, how he carried away the poetical mead from the giant Suttun etc., see Hm. 104–110, and Edda 47–49; for his travelling in disguise search of wisdom among giants and Norns, Vpm., Gm., Vsp. For Ódin many names and attributes see Edda (Gl.). The greatest families, the Ynglings in Sweden, Skjöldungs in Denmark, and the Háleygir in Norway, traced their pedigrees back to Ódin, see the poems Yt., Ht., Lan. feðgatal. In translations from the Latin, Ódin was, strangely enough taken to represent Mercury; thus, kölluðu þeir Pál Óðin, en Barnab þór, they called Paul Ódin, but Barnabas they called Þbor, is an ancient rendering of Acts xiv. 12, cp. Clem., Bret., and passim. This seems to have originated with the Romans themselves; for Tacitus says, 'deorum maxime Mercurium colunt', by which he can only mean Wodan; the Romans may have heard the German tales of Wodan's wonderful travels, his many assumed names and disguises, his changes of shape, his eloquent magical power,—tales such as abound in the Edda,—and the might make the Romans think of the Greek legends of Hermes accordingly, when the planetary week days were adopted from the Lat. 'dies Mercurii' was rendered into A. S. by Wodansdæg, in Engl. Wednesday, in Dan. Onsdag, in Norse Óðins-dagr, Orkn. 386, Fms. ix. 28; Óðins-nótt, f. Wednesday night, N. G. L. i. 17. Óðins-hani, a bird, tringa hyperborea, or the phalaropus cinereus, or the red phalaropus, see Fjölnir viii, Faber, Edda (Gl.).

II. Northern local names: Óðins-vé, n. the sanctuary of Ódin = Odense in Fünen in Denmark, Knytl. S. Óðins-salr, m. in Norway, Munch's Norg. Beskr. 79: Óðin lundr, m. Ódin's grove. In a single instance Athens is rendered Óðins-borg, and the Athenians by Óðins-borgar-menn, Post. 64 90; the name can only have been formed from the Greek name pronounced with the ð sound, perhaps by the Northmen at Constantinople who may have associated the name, thus sounded, with Ódin's supposed travels from the east to Sweden, and his halts at various places, which were afterwards called after him, as recorded in Yngl. S. As a pr. nam. Othen villicus, Dipl. Anna-Magn. (Thorcelin) i. 23; Oden Thronsdso D. N. iv. 756, 764: Óðin-dís, f., Baut., but very rare. It is noteworthy that the name of Ódin is, in the old poets, hardly ever used as appellative in poet. circumlocutions of a man; 'málm-Óðinn is a ð. ley. = warrior'. óð-inndæla, u. f. a ð. ley., [qs. of inndæla (?) from of and einde or inndæll = strange, odd]:—a puzzle (?); ek skal kerra um óðinda mína sjálfs, I have to complain of my puzzle, an accident that has happened to me, Fms. vi. 374.

ÓR or or, written with o in older vellums, or now and then even with y, yr; in later MSS. with u, ur, which in mod. Icel. is sounded long, úr. In other Teut. languages this prep. has been lost as an independent word; only the Goth. has us = ek, áwó, and the O. H. G. ar, ir, ur, which in mid. H. G. was lost and replaced by the adverb aus, O. H. G. uz, answering to Icel. út, Engl. out, a word altogether different from ór, see Grimm's Dict. s. v. er; ur, however, survived as a prefixed particle in a countless number of compds, in A. S. á-, in O. H. G. ar-, ir-, in mid. H. G. and Germ. er-; causal verbs are formed by means of this prefixed particle, e. g. Goth. us-wakjan, A. S. á-weccan, Engl. to awaken, O. H. G. ar-weccan, Germ. er-wecken. In the Scandinavian languages, on the other hand, the independent prep. has been preserved in its fullest extent, whereas the prefixed particle is rare, mostly with adjectives, and is sounded and spelt ór, e. g. ór-endr = exanimis; seldom er, for erlendir (q. v.) is different; ór- or úr- seems to belong only to words of later formation, as ór-laun, ór-skurð, úr-kast, úr-þvætti, refuse; úr-hættis, out of time (from skera ór, kasta úr). These compds will be given under the head of ór- and úr-. The quantity of the root-vowel in the particle or, ur is an unsettled question; the German and Saxon forms er-, ar-, as also the Icel. prefixed ór-, seem to indicate a short, the present Icel. pronunciation úr- a long, vowel. The MSS. in these cases give no help; in this Dictionary it has been assumed as long (ór) in deference to the majority of Editions and the present Icel. spelling and pronunciation.

rium of the oniscus; for another record see Maurer's Volks. 182; it is also called Pétrsvadsteinn, q. v. óska-stund, f. the 'wish-bour', for in the popular belief there is a point of time as short as the twinkling of an eye, recurring, some say, every day, others every week, or every year; and whatsoever one wishes at that moment comes to pass: hence the phrase, þú hefir hitt óskastundina, thou hast hit on the 'wish-bour', when a person has a piece of luck. Akin to this is the legend of three wishes granted to one by some good fairy; hence the phrase, eiga sér ósk, to own a wish; eina vildi eg eiga mér óskina svó góða, a ditty, Maurer's Volksagen. ## P

P (pó), the fifteenth letter, was not figured in the old Runic alphabet, in which the bjarkan (Þ) was made to serve for both b and p; it is found only in very late Runes, as e.g. the Runic alphabet of the Danish king Waldemar (died A.D. 1241), where it is figured K or as a dotted Þ (Þ̇). Skálda 177, and the Arna-Magn. Runic MS. II. the p is in Icel. sounded as in Engl., pína = pain, hlaupa = leap.

B. REMARKS.—As all words with p initial have been borrowed at different times from foreign languages, the number of them goes on decreasing the farther we go back into antiquity; this is also the case in other Teutonic languages; the vocabulary in Ulf. presents about seven p words,—paida, plapja, plats, plinsjan, pungs, prangan, pund; the old A. S. poems about the same number,—plega, plegian, pæd, pund, pynd, pyt, pad, peord (while the oldest and best, Beowulf, has none), see Grein. The ancient Icelandic or Norse poems of the heathen age have still fewer than the A. S.; the first words we meet with are penningr, a penny, Bragi; pundari, Egil (see ljóð-pundari);—which, with some other words beginning with p, are from the heathen age. Along with the introduction of Christianity many such words came in, chiefly through the English, e. g. prestr, pína, pínsi, páskar, páfi, pistill, prédika: through trade from the Norman-English, prúðr, prýði, páll, pallr, pell, poki, partr: and lastly, through the English trade with Iceland in the 15th and 16th centuries, prenta, puðr, petti, peisa, etc.; some few words, too, have since been adopted from the mod. Danish. A few words may be traced to Gaelic, and a few have been traced to the Chudic (Finnish); the scantiness of such words, however, shews better than anything else how very small indeed was the influence these languages had on the Norse, all the more so as the Finnish vocabulary abounds with p words. The letter p in an Icelandic Dictionary stands quite apart from all the other letters, for it is made up of a motley collection of words, incoherent and broken, containing no roots, no great verbs, particles, or such words as make the stock of a genuine vocabulary. The absence of initial p in the Teutonic language is not due to any inability to pronounce it, but to causes inherent in the parent language of the Teutonic as well as the classical languages, for in Greek and Latin the letter b, which, according to Grimm's law, answers to the Teutonic p, stands exactly in the same predicament as p in the Teutonic; there is no single instance of 'lautverschiebung' from a Gr.-Lat. b to a Teut. p (Curtius); no word beginning with p is formed by 'ablaut,' and only a few are derived by 'umlaut' (prýði, pyngja, pæla). For other details see the introduction to letters B and F.

PADDA, u, f. [A. S. pada; Dutch padde; Engl. paddock]:—a toad; ormar, eðlur, froskar, ok pöddur, snakes, lizards, frogs, and toads, Fms. x. 380; mýss ok ormar, eðlur ok pöddur, Ó. H. 109; ekki eitrvikindi, hvárki ormr né padda, Sks. 88, MS. 623. 26; þar eru eigi höggormar, froskr né padda, there are neither snakes, frogs, nor toads, viz. in Ireland, referring to the tale of St. Patrick,—a legend taken from a popular etymology of the saint's name, qs. PALL-KODDI, a, m. a cushion, Vm. 55, 109, D. N.

PALLR, m. [the etymology of this word, as also the time when and place whence it was borrowed, is uncertain; the true Norse word is bekkr or flet; pallr may be of Norman origin, although it is frequently used in the Sagas referring to the Saga time (10th century); even the benches in the legislative assembly on the alþing were called pallar, not bekkir; but this cannot have been so originally. The word itself is, like páll, probably from Lat. pallus, pala = stipes, Du Cange; Engl. pale, palings; in the Icel. it is used of high steps (Lat. gradus), esp. of any high floor or daís in old dwellings, sometimes = flet (q. v.) or = lopt (q. v.), and lastly of the benches in the hall = bekkr (q. v.) The adoption of the word was probably connected with the change in the floor and seats of the halls, as mentioned in Fagrsk. ch. 219, 220, which arrangement of benches was adopted from Norman England, and is in fact still seen in English college-halls, with the raised high floor at the upper end. In Icel. the ladies were then seated on this daís (há-pallr, þver-pallr), instead of being placed, according to the older custom, on the left hand along the side walls, see below, II. 2. As the Sagas were written after this had taken place, so the use of the word, e. g. in the Njála (ch. 34 and often), may be an anachronism.]

(where the beggar littered himself).

3. in mod. usage the sitting-room is called pallr, from its being elevated a yard or two above the level ground; í hlýindin þar hjónin búa á palli, Snót: hence pall-skör, f. the ridge of the pallr: palls-horn, n. the corner of the pallr, Nj. 220, Sturl. iii. 141.

G. L. ii. 427: a panzari as armour is chiefly mentioned in the 12th and 13th centuries, and is probably an anachronism in the Nj. l. c.

PAPI, a, m. [Lat. papa; Gr. pámma; cp. early Swed. pæpinger, whence mod. Swed. pæbling and Pæblings-søe near Copenhagen; Germ. pfaffen]:—a pope, priest; the Irish anchorites were esp. called Papar; traces of such anchorites at the first arrival of the Northmen were found in the east of Icel.; þá vóru hér menn Kristnir þeir es Norðmenn kalla Papa, Jb. ch. 1, Landn. (pref.) These 'monks of the west' had sought this remote desert island in order to shun all intercourse with men, and when the heathen Northmen came to Iceland, the Papas left it; the statement of Ari Fróði in the Landnám is confirmed by the book of the Irish monk Dicuil (De Mensurá Orbis), Ed. Paris, 1807. From these Papas are derived some local names, Pap-ey, Papýli, Pap-ösa, Papa-fjörðr, map of Icel., Landn. Papeyjar-buxur, f. pl. a kind of wizard breeches, money breeches, see Maurer's Volks. 2. the pope, Landn. 18.

prima-signa, d and ad, [Lat., an eccl. word], to give the 'prima signatio' or 'signaculum crucis', a religious act, preliminary to christening; persons thus signed with the cross were catechumens, and if adults they could join in the social life among Christians; they were also admitted to a special part of the mass (primsignandra messa = the mass for the 'prime-signed'), whereas all intercourse with heathens was forbidden. An infant who died, having received the prima signatio, but not baptism, was to be buried in the outskirts of the churchyard, where the consecrated and unconsecrated earth meet, and without burial service, — ef barn andask primsignat, ok hefir eigi verit skírt (primsignat ok hefir eigi meiri skírn, Sb. l. c.) ok skal þat grafa við kirkju-garð út, þar er mætisk vígð mold ok úvigð, ok syngva eigi leigsöng yfir, K. p. K. (Kb.) 7. A monster-shapen infant was to receive the prima signatio, but not baptism, and then to be left to die (exposed) at the church door — þat barn (a monster-child) skal ok til kirkju bera, láta primsigna, leggja fyrir kirkju-dyr, gæti inn næsti niðr til þess er önd er ör, N. G. L. i. 339; í þessi efan primsigni prestr ok skíri, iii. 251; hann primsignaði hann fyrst ok skírði hann síðan eptir síðenju, Barl. 147. The words in the English Prayer Book — 'and do sign him (her) with the sign of the cross' — are remains of the 'signaculum crucis' of the ancient church. During the heathen age the Scandinavian merchants and warriors who served among Christians abroad in England or Germany used to take the prima signatio, for it enabled them to live both among Christians and heathens without receiving baptism and forsaking their old faith; ek em primsignadr at eins en eigi skírðr, I am 'prime-signed', but not baptized, Fms. ii. 240, Valla L. 205, Kristni S. ch. i. 2, Fb. i. 346, 357, ii. 137, 243; England var Kristið ok hafði lengi verit þá er þetta var tíðenda, Aðalsteinn konungr var vel Kristinn... hann bað þórólf ok þá bræðr at þeir skyldi láta primsignask, þvíat þat var þá mikill siðr, bæði með kaupmönnum ok þeim er á mála zengu með Kristnum mönnum, þvíat þeir menn, er primsignindir vóru, höfðu allt samneyti við Kristna menn ok svá heidna, en höfðu þat at lítrunadi er þeim var skapfeldast, Eg. 265, Gísl. 96: see also Vita Anscarii, th. 24. These 'prime-signed' men, returning to their native land, brought with them the first notions of Christianity into the heathen Northern countries, having lived among Christians, and seen their daily life and worship, and they undoubtedly paved the way for the final acceptance of the Christian faith among their countrymen. It may even be that some strange heathen rites of the last days of paganism, such as the bjannak (q. v.), the sprinkling of infants with water, were due to this cause.

RÍTA, pres. rit, rítr, rítr; part. reit, the 2nd pers. does not occur; pl. ritu; subj. ríti; imperat. rit; part. rítninn; the earliest writers use the strong conjugation; thus in the treatise of Thorodd, ek rit, 165, l. 26, 166, ll. 22-24, 168, l. 10; rít'k = rit ek, 166, l. 36; þú rítr, 161, l. 2 from the bottom, 168, l. 19; ek reit, 168, l. 4; part. rítnir, rítn, rítnum, 161, 168-168: in the other instances the weak form seems merely due to the transcriber of the Cod. Worm. of the 14th century, and the old forms ought to be restored; thus, pres. rítar, 160, l. 3 from the bottom, 165, l. 1; pret. rítaði, rítaðr, 164, l. 31; part. rítað, ll. 3, 32, etc.; infin. ríta for ríta, l. 3; Ari also uses the strong form, lb. 4, Hkr. i. 48: in the pref. to Landn. for rítað read rítid (?); reit, Hkr. iii. 347. In writers of later times, as also in later transcripts of old writers, the weak form (ek rita, ritar, ritar, rítaði, rítað) prevails; thus in the pref. to Ó. H., pres. rita (once), pret. rítaði (five times), rítaði, 248; rítaðar and rítuðr, Sturl. i. 107, Fms. x. 371; rítað, Knytl. S. ch. 1, 21, 95, Hungv. ch. 1; and so on: the part. rítninn remained longest, thus, eptir sögu þjóðólfs var fyrst rítninn æfi Ynglinga, Hkr. Frissb. (pref.), Fms. vii. 156, Grág. i. 76, Symb. (fine). The Norse vellums seem to know the weak form only, e. g. rítaði, Sks. 563 B. The root to this word is well known in the Scand. languages in derived words, as reitr, reita, rit (q. v.), yet the verb itself, at least in the sense 'to write,' seems to have been adopted from the A. S., as it nowhere occurs on the Runic stones or in old poets, and always means writing on parchment, rísta being used of writing on stone; the original form is rísta: [A. S. uritan; Engl. to write; Germ. reissen; O. H. G. rizan = to scratch; Scot. rit or ret; cp. also Ulf. urits = κεφαία, Luke xvi. 17.]

The interesting passage in Fms. ix. 33 (ch. 14) is an instance of ships with double rows of oars; Knútr inn ríki hafði skip furbúliga stór, hann hafði sjálf dreka þann er svá var mikill, at sextugt var at rúma tali. . . Hákon hafði annan dreka, var sá fertugt at rúma tali, Ó. H. 161: the Hálfdr. Eyst. S. ch. 26 (of a ship, tírætt at rúma tali) is a mere fable: only a few of the oar-rooms are known by special names, e.g. stafin-rúm, the two fyrir-rúm (eptra ok fremra), the two austr-rúm (one fore and one aft, or even four, cp. senn jósu vér í fjórum rúmum, Fms. vi. in a verse), the klofa-rúm, krappa-rúm, q. v.; betra er autt rúm en illa skipað, better an empty seat than an ill-filled one, cp. rúm-sæi, n. S. rún = a 'röuning' mystery, but also = writing, charter; Hel. rúna = colligium, and geruni = loguella (Schmeller); cp. Old Engl. to roun, Germ. raunen; Gr. ῥηνάω is also supposed to be a kindred word (Bugge). In Scandin. writers and poets rún is chiefly used of magical characters, then of writing, whereas the derivative word raun means trial, enquiry, and rúni and rúna = a friend or counsellor.]

B. A secret, hidden lore, mystery; frá jötna rúnum ok allra goða segðu í sannasta, Vpm. 42, 43; kenna rúnar, to teach wisdom, Rm. 33; dæma um rúnar ok regin-dóma, Hm. 112; minnask á fornar rúnar, Vsp. 59; segja sannar rúnir, to tell true saws, Fas. ii. 302 (in a verse): a 'röuning' speech, vífs rúnir, a woman's whispering, Bm.; heita e-n at rúnum, to consult one, Gh. 12, Skv. 3. 14, 43; hniga at rúnum, Gkv. 3. 4.

II. A Rune or written character; the earliest Runes were not writing in proper sense, but fanciful signs possessing a magical power; such Runes have, through vulgar superstition, been handed down even to the present time, for a specimen of them see Ísl. Þjóðs. 435, 436, and Arna-Magn. Nos. 687. 4to, and 434. 12mo (Ísl. Þjóðs. pref. ix); the classical passages for these spell-Runes are, Hm. 133 sqq., Sdm. 5 sqq., Skm. 29, 36, Eg. ch. 44, 61, 75; Yngl. S. ch. 7, Gret. ch. 85, N. G. L. iii. 286, 300, Vsp. 59; cp. also the phrase, rísta trétt, Grág., Fs. 56. The phrase in the old Danish Ballads, kaste runer, to throw Runes, i. e. chips (see hlaut, hlautviðr), may be compared to the Lat. sortes, Mommsen's Hist. of Rome, vpl. i. p. 187, foot-note (Engl. Ed.), or the Sibylline leaves in the Aeneid.

2. Runes as writing; the word was first applied to the original Northern alphabet, which at an early time was derived from the common Phœnician, probably through Greek or Roman coins in the first centuries of our era. From these Runes were subsequently formed two alphabets, the old Scandinavian (whence again the Anglo-Saxon), as found on the Golden horn and the stone in Tune, and the later Scandinavian, in which the inscriptions in the greater number of the Swedish and Danish stone monuments are written, most being of the 10th (9th?) and following centuries.—curious instance of the employment of Runes is their being written on kefi (a round piece of wood) as messages (cp. the Gr. συντάλη), is freq. recorded in the Sagas, e.g. Gisl. 45, 67, Fms. ix. 390, 49, Gret. 154 new Ed., Fb. i. 251 (of the deaf and dumb Oddny). It doubtful whether poems were ever written in this way, for almost t only authority for such a statement is Eg. 605, where we read th the Sonatorrek was taken down on a Runic stick, the other instance being mostly from romances or fabulous Sagas, Gret. 144, Örvar Odds (fine). This writing on a kefi is mentioned in the Latin line, Barba 'fraxineis' sculptatur runa 'tabellis,' Capella (5th century). In la times (from the 13th century) Runic writing was practised as a sort curiosity; thus calendars used to be written on sticks, of which th is a specimen in the Bodl. Library in Oxford; they were also used inscriptions on tombstones, spoons, chairs, and the like: there ex exists in the Arna-Magn. Library a Runic MS. of an old Danish law, a there is a Runic letter in Sturl. (of the year 1241); Runes carved an oar occur in Fs. 177: a hidden treasure in a chest is labelled w Runes, Fms. vi. 271, Sd. 146, cp. also the interesting record in Bs 435 (sex manna bein voru þar hjá honum ok vax ok rúnar þær sögðu atburð lifáts þeirra).

3. The word rún is also, thou rarely, applied to the Latin alphabet; ef hann er á þingi þá s hann rísta nafn hans ef hann kann rúnar, N. G. L. i. 171; or genera ræki ek eigi hvárt þú rítr þitt eðr o, o eða a, g eða e, y eða u, en svara svá, eigi er þat rúnanna kostr þó at þú lesir vel eða ráðir vel líkindum, þar sem rúnar vísa óskirt, heldr er þat þinn kostr, Thor. 162; þessi er upphaf allra háttá svá sem málrúnar eru fyrir öðrum rúnt Edda (Ht.) 121.

rún-henda, u, f., or rún-hending, f., is the name of the metre u end-rhymes, consecutive, not alternate; the word is now obsolete, in ancient writers it only occurs in two places, the Ht. R. verse 24; in Edda (Ht.), where the Cod. Reg. gives rún-, Edda i. 696 sqq. (foot-notes); but one is tempted to suspect that this is corrupt, and t the true form was rún-, as im and un can hardly be distinguished in MSS.; rún- would yield good sense, whereas rún- is meaning! The metre itself is evidently of foreign origin, borrowed from the A. the first poem in this metre was the Höfuðl. of Egil, who had li in England; it was little used throughout the 10th and the follow centuries, and the few poems and fragments composed in it can be tra to Egil's poem as their prototype. The ancient Scandinavian rast seems to have answered to the modern geographical mile, which agrees with the Latin mille only in name, its actual distance being that of the rast, not the Roman mille passus. The distances were not measured, but roughly guessed, and varied (like the Swiss stunde) according to the nature of the ground traversed, the rasts through mountains or deserts being shorter than those in an inhabited district; hence such phrases as, þat eru langar tvær rastir, it is two long rasts, Fms. ix. 393; þeir sóttu svá hart þessa eyðimörk, at skammar vóru þá þrettán rastir eptir, thirteen short rasts, viii. 33: the following instances may serve, in Norway the distance from Oslo (the present Christiania) to Eidsvold was counted at eight 'rasts,' ix. 376; þeir fórusk svá nær at eigi var lengra til en röst, 371; þeir ríða síðan átta rastir . . . þrjár vikur eptir vötnum, 376; ríðu þeir nokkura hálfa röst, 523; þat var eina nótt, at eigi var lengra milli náttstaða þeirra en röst, viii. 63; rastar langr, ix. 394, 402; rastar-djúpr, Hým.: of the old forests, Eíða-skógr er tólf rasta langr, Fms. ix. 354; skógr tólf rasta langr, . . . þann skógr er áttján rasta var yfir, viii. 30, 31; sá skógr er Tviðir heitir, hann er tólf rasta breiðr, Rb. 332; fjögurra rasta ok tuttugu, Gullþ. 52:—six 'rasts' done afoot in one night is recorded as something extraordinary, Ólafí kom njósnin um kveldit, en þeir gengu um nóttina sex rastir ok þótti mönnum þat furðumikit farit, þeir kómu á Ryðjökul um óttu-söng, Fms. vii. 317; átta röstum, þkv.: an immense distance is given at 'a hundred rasts,' hundrað rasta á hverjan veg, Vpm. ## S

S (ess), the eighteenth letter, was, in the old Runes, on the one hand, the same as the letter T, and the Golden horn, figured Z; in the common Runes the latest Runic inscriptions (12th and following centuries) the name was 'Sól' (Sun)—Sól er landa ljómi, in the Runic poem was specially, from its form, called the 'kné-sól' (knee-sun).

B. PRONUNCIATION, CHANGES.—Sounded sharper than in the S is in mod. Icel. pronunciation the only sibilant sound; in o s and z were distinguished in sound as well as in writing, wards the z sound was lost or assimilated with s.

II. s into r, as vera, var, er, for vesa, vas, es; as also the particle Gothic s into Scandinavian r in the words, Goth. bausjan, a heyra, eyra; the inflex. Goth. -s into Scandin. -r: an assimilation place in such words as laus-s, ís-s, for laus-r, ís-r; again, in vellu s in such forms as búss (gen.) from bú, nýss = nýs, hirðiss = hirð in mod. usage this inflexive s is dropped in sound and spelling the ancients, on the other hand, said vissa, vissi, mod. visra, v entum, sapienti):—sn is sounded stn, stnúa, stnóri, stnöggr, stn snúa, snóri, snöggr, snjór . . . and thus spelt in some Norse vello the Barl.): here come in also such forms as laustn, njostn, ristn njóstn, rísta, reistn and reisin, O. H. L. (pref.) ix; so also the f ríðr, Ást-leifr, Ást-lákr (see the remarks s. v. ást), = Ás-ríðr . . . Baut.

2. skl = sl, thus skliakka = slakka, D. I. i. 280, rare: cp. the Germ. spelling scl = Icel. and Engl. sl (Germ. s Icel. slá); as also the Fr. esclave and slave.

3. sk corre skr, skokkr, skykkjum, and skrokkr, skrykkjótt; analogous skjallr, Engl. shrill:—sk for s, in sjaldan and skjaldan, Icel. Dan. skör-leuned.

4. sk answers to Engl. sb (skip, fish ship, fish), except in a few words, as Engl. skin, score, which borrowed from the Norse. There are more words beginning s than with any other letter of the alphabet; this is due to the tion of sk, sm, sp, and st.

SADDR, part., older form saðr, Hým. i, which answers to and Lat., [Ulf. saps, Luke vi. 25, xv. 16; O. H. G. sat; Lat. s sedja]:—sated, having got one's fill, Hým. i.; vera s. á e-u, I e-s, Hbl. 3; s. lífdaga, full of days, Bible; hálf-s, half sated. saðning, f. satiety, fill, Stj. 157, 164, passim.

II. saðr = saddr, q. v. safali, a m., safal, n., Flor. 5, 7, 10, D. N.; [for word] the animal, and hence the fur, Eg. 57, 64, 71, Ö. H. 134, Fl safala-skin, sable-fur, Þórð. 61.

SAFI, a m. [Engl. sap; Germ. saft], the sap of trees (the berries is called lögr, q. v.); bökr af víði ok safi, Fms. viii. átu safi okugu birki-við, 33; ber ok safi, Fas. iii. 208, passim safn, n. a collection, Vm. 6, 15, passim in mod. usage. safna, að, see samna.

sag, n. sawdust:—sawing, keppa sag, Skíða R.

saga, að, to saw, cut with a saw, Barl. 166, Fms. vii. 89.

SAGA, u. f., gen. sögu, pl. sögur; gen. pl. sagna is rare; and in the gen. sing. sögu- is preferred, thus sögu-bók, sögu-fróðr, which is used in a collective sense; when gen. sagna- is used it is often regarded as borrowed from sögn, as in sagna-fróðr, sagna-meistari; s saga, however, occurs in dæmi-sagna, Stj. 560; Orkneyinga-saga, 90, 1. 3 from the bottom: [from segja; cp. Engl. saw; Germ. sagen].

B. A story, tale, legend, history. The very word owes its the fact that the first historical writings were founded on tradition; the written record was a 'saga' or legend committed to writing; story thus written was not even new, but had already taken shape had been told to many generations under the same name; the written history and the story told were both alike called Saga, as in Gr. both were called λόγος (Herod. i. 184, ii. 161, vi. 19). Some instances when history is mentioned by name it is difficult to say: a told or written Saga be meant; the former seems to be the case in the Landnám—þar hefsk saga Harðar Grímkels-sonar ok Geir 62; þar gördisk saga þeirra Þorbjarnar ok Hávarðar en halta, þbjörn var víga-maðr mikill, ok er saga mikil frá honum, 150 þa gördisk saga Ísfríðinga ok víg Þorbjarnar, 14; þar af gördisk s móðs gerpis ok Grímólfs, 157; þar af gördisk Svarfðæla saga, 20 þa gördisk Þorskríðinga saga, 124; ok þar var Þórðr gellir leiddr í tók mannvirðing, sem segir í sögu hans, 111. Some of these S perhaps never committed to writing; others not till a later date, tradition had deteriorated; but they were told and known by name time when the Landn. was first composed, see Safn i. 101. Written again, are those recorded in later works,—ok getr hans í Laxd.
